Jean impulsively answers a stranger’s annoying cell phone in a quiet café. The stranger has just died. Now Jean finds herself unable to stop answering the dead man’s cell phone, becoming more and more involved with his family, his mistress, his questionable past, and the one person who may just become the love of her life. This contemporary satire by two-time Pulitzer Prize finalist and Tony-nominee, Sarah Ruhl explores the struggle to make connections in an increasingly divided world.
