Pot arrests unconstitutional?

(CPS)--The joint you are smoking may soon be protected by the US Constitution, if a number of suits being filed in state and federal courts around the country are successful. Alaska has already given constitutional protection to pot use in the home.

The National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), the nation's most successful pot lobby, has filed suits claiming that the use of marijuana in the home falls under the protection of the constitutional right to privacy. NORML has filed suits in California, Illinois, Tennessee and the District of Columbia.

The suits mark a major shift in NORML's strategy, which has formerly concentrated its resources on lobbying efforts in Congress and various state legislatures. NORML was instrumental in getting marijuana decriminalized in six states.

But the decision of the Alaska Supreme Court broke the ice on the constitutional issue and set a strong precedent that will be used in the other suits. NORML will now devote a much greater proportion of its resources to court battles than it had earlier, but will continue to lobby in legislatures as well.

The Alaska Supreme Court, in its unanimous ruling, stated that there was no firm evidence that marijuana use was harmful to the user or would "constitute a public health problem of any significant dimension...mere scientific doubts," said the court, "did not warrant government intrusion into the privacy of the home."

Since the Alaska decision was based on a privacy clause in the state constitution rather than the US Constitution, it cannot be appealed to the US Supreme Court.

That aspect is one of the advantages of pursuing marijuana reform through the courts rather than legislative bodies, according to Keith Stroup, director of NORML. The court decision is not subject to the whimsy of politicians. Once the decision is made in a state supreme court, based on the state constitution, it has fundamental protection that can only be changed by that court itself or by a constitutional amendment.

A decision putting marijuana use under the protection of the right of privacy would also allow someone to cultivate the weed for personal use and to transport it as well. Under the Alaska decision, there is not constitutional protection for amounts of marijuana for sale rather than for personal use.

In addition to the principle argument of the right of privacy, the suits also claim that current marijuana laws constitute cruel and unusual punishment for the offense involved, and that the laws deny equal treatment under law, since alcohol and tobacco are not treated the same even though there is definite proof that they can pose health hazards.

Some of the arguments opposing constitutional protection for the private use of marijuana state that the substance has indeed proven to be dangerous and that constitutional protection would open the door for similar rulings for more dangerous drugs such as heroin.

Peter Meyer, legal counsel for NORML, counters these arguments on the grounds that the suit deals only with marijuana, that there is no positive proof of harm and that the burden of proof is on the state to prove that pot "poses some significant threat to the individual or danger to the public welfare"--a threat that has not been proven.

In addition, Meyers said, even if a substance were to prove dangerous to an individual, it would still violate his constitutional right to use it personally: "Why don't we have laws against skydiving? That's dangerous."

Until the Alaska decision, courts would not rule on the constitutional question, but rather take "an easy out" by claiming that marijuana was an issue for the legislatures, said Meyers. They "simply did not want to get involved," he explained. But now that Alaska has taken a "leadership role," other courts are more likely to confront the privacy issue, Meyers added.

The question is bound to reach the U.S. Supreme Court.

Since the District of Columbia lies under federal jurisdiction, the suit has been filed in federal court. An appeal would go directly to the US Supreme Court, and according to Stroup of NORML, either side that loses will definitely take it to the high court. Former Attorney General Ramsey Clark will donate his time to argue for NORML's suit.

In California, the suit cites privacy clauses in both the state and federal constitutions. California boasts more marijuana arrests than any other state. In Los Angeles County alone, where the suit has been filed (along with San Francisco County) the number of pot busts is higher than most states. Even though California has recently passed legislation reducing marijuana penalties, the law does not go far enough, according to Gordon Brownell, west coast director of NORML.

The absolute earliest that the suits in various states are expected to reach trial in lower courts is next spring. They may not reach the state supreme courts of the US Supreme Court for two years.

Bookstore security tight

"We are not trying to create a Gestapo state inside the store, we are just trying to protect our investment," commented Betty Brock, manager of Your Campus Store, on the subject of increased store security. Uniformed guards, Criminal Justice majors, and other devices are some of the devices employed to reduce shoplifting, a crime which took American businessmen for $60 billion during 1975. Thefts from the store tallied to $20,000 last year, which includes price changing and internal losses, as well as shoplifting. According to Brock, "To pay for that loss, we have to sell around $50,000 in extra merchandise."

The added security measures were engineered by the Criminal Justice majors, who are working for independent study credit through this project. These measures include CJA majors working as plainclothesmen in the store, and a seminar on shoplifting sponsored by the Small Business Administration used as a part of the store staff's training.

Brock stated that all persons apprehended for shoplifting and price changing are booked by the Boise Police Department, and all stand trial. "All those charged so far have been convicted," she stated. The store will not release names of anyone apprehended.

Students OK bottle bill, building needs

The student lobby poll has been tabulated and issues decided upon, according to Barb Bridwell, BSU lobby director. The poll was held Wednesday and Thursday of last week, approximately 300 full and part time students voted in the survey.

The topics garnering the most student support for lobbying purposes were BSU building needs, student/faculty ratio, student representation on the State Board of Education, the beverage container deposit bill, and the tenant/landlord compromise bill, according to Bridwell.

"We got what we expected, although I'm surprised there wasn't more support shown for land use planning issues and decriminalization of drunken driving," she said.

"As far as student representation on the State Board goes, this year will be mainly an introductory year. I would hope that this can be accomplished within the next two to three years at least. California has this system and it has worked well.

"The tenant/landlord bill should go through this year as it is the third year it has been presented. I believe the tenants and landlords have reached an agreement so there shouldn't be the problems there have been in past years," she said.

The beverage container bill won't be easy, Bridwell stated, but if the success it has met with in Oregon can be shown, it has a chance.

Burger magnates attempt bill

The Idaho State Legislature is in the process of considering a new minimum wage and hour bill which would raise the minimum wage to $2 per hour on July 1, 1976; $2.20 per hour on January 1, 1977 and $2.30 per hour on July 1, 1977. A minimum wage is simply the lowest level at which an employee may be legally paid.

The 1974 amendments to the minimum wage and hour law, called the Hamburger Amendments, modified the student certificate program of the Fair Labor Standards Act. This program states that full time students can be employed at 85 per cent of the minimum wage. The amendments extended the Act's applicability to include higher education institutions. And it is this type of amendment certain Hamburger chain magnates are advocating the Idaho Legislature to tack onto the current wage bill being studied.

The plight of the self-supporting student is in bad shape now, but it would become rapidly worse if no law required employers to pay students a minimum wage. A study several years ago by the College Scholarship Service stated that the average budget for a self supporting student for one year is $2,225. Of that, 33.5 per cent goes to housing; 25.9 per cent, food; 9.3, clothing; transportation, 10.5 per cent; medical care 5.0 per cent debt repayment 7.6 per cent and other expenses, 8.0 per cent.

Opponents of the minimum wage bill say that a minimum wage would cause youth unemployment. A study by the Labor Department concluded that the general state of the economy is most responsible for fluctuations in youth employment and unemployment. Some states which have different minimum wages for youth, the study said, had little change in youth unemployment.

Young workers need what all workers need--more jobs, at an adequate minimum wage. No one male, female, black, white young or old should be required to work for less than an adequate minimum wage. It is time students weren't penalized for seeking education.

Curt said ...

by Jack Bryson

This week I would like to share with you the first chapter of my first and forthcoming novel The Trials and Tribulations of Curt Said.

Chapter One

It was a dark and stormy night. A shot rang out. Someone screamed. Someone was born, someone died, someone was raped, mugged, and molested. It was a normal night in the city.

Curt Said, a tall dark slender handsome, debonaire, charming, witty private eye, found his way across the city. He was on his way to his girls' house for dinner. She was new for him and he was anxious to see her again. He had met her only the night before while working on an exciting, romantic case that seemingly plagued men of fortune. The meeting was quite accidental. He had been working his way through every massage parlor in the city on the trail of a well-known evil person, when Curt had misread the room number on his massage slip and entered the wrong room. It was difficult at first to tell who was giving who the massage. As soon as Curt saw Lisa Lust his heart among other things began to throb.

Curt now stood before Lisa Lust's door holding a dozen long stemmed Peace roses. He knocked with authority, knowing full well he was in for an evening's enjoyment. Lisa opened the door. Curt throbbed. "Oh, it's you," Lisa Lust grunted, "Come on in." Curt handed Lisa the roses as he slithered through the door. Lisa took them and deposited them on the floor near the couch as she walked toward the kitchen. "Thanks, ah. What's your name again?" she said. "Curt Said," said Curt Said. "No, sweetie," Lisa lusted, "I said 'What's your name?'" "Curt Said," repeated Said. "Okay, have it your way, sweetie. Sit down at the table. Dinner is about ready," she said as she disappeared through the kitchen door.

Curt positioned himself at the table so he could see the entire room at once, a trick years of being a great detective had taught him. The door opened. Flo Flower, one of Lisa's roommates entered. "Hi," Flo said, "I'm Flo Flower, one of Lisa's roommates. What's your name, sweetie?" "Curt Said," said Curt. "Said what?" Flo said. "Curt," said Said.

"Have it your way, sweetie," Flo said as she removed her coat and positioned herself at the table.

Once again the door opened and in walked yet another of Lisa's roommates, Freda Floptop, a well endowed young lady who refused to wear anything but halter tops regardless of the weather. Curt's eyes focused on Freda Floptop as she bound abundantly across the room and flopped on a chair. "You're well endowed, aren't you?" Curt said, attempting small talk. "Yes," replied Freda, "My mother dealt in real estate and when she died she left me a great deal of land. I am grateful to her for the two mountains she gave me." "So am I," Curt sighed.

Debbie Dull opened the door to the apartment. "I'm here," said Debbie Dull as she entered the room which suddenly took on an air of sleepiness. Everyone grunted "hello" and yawned together.

Lisa entered the room carrying the last of the Salisbury steak TV dinners. "Sit down," Lisa Lust yawned, "Dinner is about ready." Dully, Debbie Dull sat down.

The meal began without further delay. Curt took his knife and cut off a huge portion of the steak and inserted it into his mouth. "This steak tastes tasteless," Curt Said said tastelessly. "I think it tastes tasteful," Lisa Lust lusted tastefully. "It tastes like garbage, worse yet, it tastes like tasteless garbage," Curt Said said curtly. Lisa reached below the table and drew a .45 magnum pistol out and pointed it directly at Curt. Curt looked up as he stuck another huge chunk of steak into his mouth. "You're being rude," curtly said Curt.

Flo Flower felt faint as she fluidly flowed to the floor with a plop. Lisa leveled the gun at Curt's chest and squeezed the trigger. The explosion that followed left a magnificent gaping hole in Curt's chest. The bullet pierced Curt between two ribs and exited immediately through his back taking with it one entire half of Curt's heart.

Curt placed his hand over the new deletion in his chest and looked coldly at Lisa Lust. "Well, I didn't think the steak tasted that bad," he said half heartedly.

"Darnit," Debbie Dull said, the first time in her life she had ever used a nasty word, and everyone including Curt yawned.

'BSU has lost a great friend'

Editor, the ARBITER

It's been a couple of years since I've done any work for your paper, but I'd like to cover one last story, since it was while working for the Arbiter that I met the late Roger Green, financial vice-president for BSU.

Roger died last week, victim of a cancer which had racked his body for the last three years. At his funeral, the state's leaders in politics and education, his family and personal friends, and those who worked daily with Roger in the administration of Boise State sat side by side to pay their last respects. I was just one of the many students Roger had helped who was there.

Roger helped me, not only to continue my education, but more importantly, to grow up. I was a foolish reporter, sometimes neglecting to check out my facts for fear of ruining what I thought was a "good" story. Roger helped me develop more regard for the consequences of my actions.

Other students, especially those in student government, have been similarly impetuous, and Roger was always willing to counsel them, to help them realize their possible goals and recognize their impossible ones.

The student and the university always came first with Roger; I can think of no one less motivated by personal ambition or selfishness.

So it was not surprising that his funeral service was designed not to eulogize Roger, but rather to reassure and comfort those of us who are left. The minister who conducted the service told us of Roger's strong faith in God and his belief in the Resurrection, and his wish that this be communicated to us all.

Roger's body has been returned to the hills in Kansas where he was raised. Meanwhile, Boise State has lost a great friend and tireless servant. To those who question the death of this young husband and father, and the loss of our friend, I can only suggest that perhaps it has served to offer us all a source of inspiration. Katrina Brown

Open letter to Balch

Editor, the ARBITER

This is an open letter to Walt Balch.

In your letter published last week, you complained of insufficient publicity for the SUB Annex Hearings of December 3 and 4. You wondered, and I quote, "If this hearing was so open, how come it was kept so secret from the vast majority of the student body? Was it advertised on a 3" x 5" card hidden among the "Riders Wanted" inquiries, or, which is my opinion is more truthful, was the time, and place of this hearing only told to the people who are in favor of this annex?"

Walt, it was publicized. Did you fail to notice the 4" x 4" ad for the hearing located on page 3 of the ARBITER on November 24? Did you fail to notice the video monitor in the SUB lobby on December 3 or 4 when it was posted there? That's as much publicity as is usually needed for any meeting, program, or other event.

Before you cry foul, check out your complaints. Jim O'Malley

'This is only the beginning'

by Elliot Jonson

Those of us who have been around since the ark sank and Boise State College became Boise State University; those of us who harken back to the days when Lee Mercy was the ASB Vice-President and Phil Yerby wrote the classic phrase "Flush twice it's a long way to the river"; we who remember when Veterans Office director Bermecoso finally graduated with a degree in Theatre Arts followed closely by Tom Moore's expertise in bringing the ASB out of debt are pleasantly surprised at the promise of this institution's freshman class. It is indeed refreshing for those of us who have been embraced by a carefully spun web of apathy to see the ordered group of young colleagues on the horizon.

There is a reason for this productive about-face. According to Rosalie Nadeau, Director of Affirmative Action and former BSU student, the days of the popular revolution are over. This is basically correct. Though most everyone recognizes the need for change, they are becoming more aware of the need to negate violence as the instrument for said change. Since violence has been ruled out, an old avenue has opened. This old route of approach is involvement and it utilizes many outlets least of which is to play by the rules of orderly process. It would appear by all indicators that the lost generation is finding itself, and it is having righteous success in the freshman class.

The freshman student is finding out that part of a solid education is the rewards inherent to student organizations, fraternities and sororities, student government and programming. The third curriculum is becoming increasingly important to the new college student as a supplement to the book-worm image typified by classic education. The freshman student is learning that in order to change society it is necessary to understand the rules and then to participate before any active role can be initiated in the process of change, but more importantly the freshman is finding that this route is a long and involved involvement. Just as every student has discovered.

What makes this group of new students really different is that they are ready to accept this challenge. This acceptance is the promise, and this promise is only the beginning; however, this beginning will be the foundation of a fundamental renaissance.

Wilper tours coal fired power plant

Editor, the ARBITER

Last month I was among four BSU students who toured the Jim Bridger coal fired power plant in Rock Springs, Wyoming. I must admit that before taking the tour I was opposed to such a plant being built in Idaho on the basis of "What's good for Idaho Power is bad for the environment."

I expected a high pressure snow job, but was given instead very frank answers to all my questions.

We were told the plant was 99.7 per cent pollution free, which doesn't mean much by itself, but as we watched one of the four burners producing at full capacity we saw very little smoke coming from the smoke stack. The soot I had expected to see on cars and buildings just wasn't there.

I was especially impressed with the strip coal mine which operates adjacent to the plant. After a vein of ore is extracted, the pit is filled in and students from the University of Wyoming conduct experiments to determine how the land can best be reclaimed. This reclamation process is not just a token to subdue those of us who cannot abide a rape of the environment.

Having lived in Boise all my life, I'm less than satisfied with the haphazard growth we've been experiencing for the past few years. I'm, therefore, still very leery of the Pioneer plant, which may not only supply consumers, but attract new industry and be the start of a vicious cycle.

We should remember that our strict regulation of heavy industry in the past has been the very thing that has made Idaho such an attractive place to live. With this in mind we can weigh the benefits the pioneer plant would have, against the possibility of sacrificing the quality of life we enjoy here. Above all, we must continue to say no to giant corporate interests who would move here merely for the great power supply we will have if the plant is built. Ron Wilper

Flewelling clarifies to prevent misunderstanding

Editor, the ARBITER

A further clarification of the article in the Arbiter of January 7, 1976, is called for to prevent a misunderstanding. The twenty-fourth amendment to the U.S. Constitution applies only to the election of the U.S. Congress and Executive and not to state or local governments. However, the precedent remains that the right to vote should not be denied to citizens who do not pay a "poll tax, or any other tax." This is a matter that should be considered by the

ASB Senate, since part-time students are going to be allowed to vote in the upcoming Lobby Opinion Poll. Possibly an amendment to the ASB constitution would be in order to bring it into agreement with the U.S. Constitution. This could grant ASB citizenship and the right to vote but would not necessarily change the other rights or restrictions contained in the ASB Constitution. John Flewelling Chief Justice ASBSU Judiciary Council

Kathy Dripps, senior. I don't know if I would consider working for less than the minimum, and then too again it throws it on the employer and I would think that all of a sudden he could start paying people less, and that would hurt the people that need the jobs.

Bob Garrecht, junior [not shown]. I think it's crummy.

Miren Asumendi, junior. It seems really rotten to me, because if anyone needs help in school and with money it's the students.

The Idaho State Legislature is currently considering a new minimum wage bill. Certain labor factions are hoping for an amendment to exclude students from the bill. What is your opinion of this move?

Tracy Moens, freshman. I think it's a rip-off.

Stephan Levitt, freshman. Wrong! They're the same as anybody else.

Pat Nieser, senior [not shown]. All the people that hire students do so because they can get them for cut-rate pay and if the students were included in the minimum wage there would be a lot of students out of work.

Mark Hansen, Instructor. Simply an effort to get cheap labor. The minimum wage is itself too low. I think it's just a bill being pushed through by employers.

Who is Bernard Chubet III

(CPS)--Who is Bernard John Chubet III and how did he fleece us out of nearly $1300?

That is the question several people around Princeton University are asking themselves these days after the discovery that the mysterious Chubet is not a Princeton student as he said and that the bills he ran up at two posh campus clubs might never be paid.

It seems Chubet, 22, waltzed into Princeton's exclusive Tower Club last fall clad in the traditional Ivy League duds and throwing around tales of his house in Greenwich and his sporty Alfa Romeo car. And even though he borrowed a lot of money and sometimes mispelled his own name, everybody bought his story.

"You just wanted to believe him, he was so sincere," said Tower Club member William Lee. "He was very controversial, very reasonable. You name it, he was it."

Chubet won over so many friends around Princeton that the Tower Club, accustomed to dealing with gentlemen scholars, let him charge up $892.50 worth of meals. The Cloister Inn, where Chubet hung his Brooks Brothers suits at night, allowed him to pile up a $400 rent bill. Charges have been pressed against Chubet and he faces a maximum penalty of $1000 and three years in jail for obtaining services under false pretenses. By all accounts, Chubet was a true pro. "He had his act down pat," observed Tower Club member Lee.

"...I never had a really good art teacher in high school," said Debbie Fischer, feature artist of this week's Gallery. "I would like to really be a good teacher. To know that I have helped someone would be really satisfying."

"Art is part of me, it's whatever mood I'm in. Part of my personality deals with art and I can't separate that; it's like an athlete is an athlete, it's what makes him up. Art is like a tranquilizer. When I don't do it I get frustrated."

"I would like to be known as a female who has become an artist. Not very many females have done so. Because I am married people believe that after we have children, art for me will become a hobby; but I would like to be known as a female artist, not as a hobbyist."

"Ken is an artist, too, and we've been married about a year and a half, but both of us being artists has never been a conflict. Once we did a painting together, it was difficult because he has a totally different style than I have. The biggest problem is usually who gets to use the table first or who used that pencil last - where's the eraser."

"I think originality is essential, to be able to say 'I created that from my own idea from a vision in my mind. Since majoring in art, it seems each year I see more things. I don't just walk down the street; I notice how intricate things are, how leaves are put together, how...I guess art has been opening up my eyes."

"I always have the feeling that I am not considered good enough to be an artist. I want to be an artist; I work to be one. So when I win awards I start thinking, well, maybe I am, but still I don't feel I have the quality of art work I hope to have someday."

"I graduated from Twin Falls High School and College of Southern Idaho and now I'm a senior here and majoring in art education. That's it? Good, because I don't want to become famous if I have to go through more interviews like this."

Critics' corner

An 'A to Z' rating to the movie 'that is you'

by Linda Knighton

Open your newspaper on any day to the entertainment section and you find yourself wandering through the wilderness of movies available. The industry believes that it has blazed a trail (or at least provided highway markers) to help you find the type of movie that, "is you."

A brief examination of the ratings shows that our guides have divided cinema into four major categories: X, PG (or GP) and G. But exactly what do they mean? The following is my own opinion.

X ranges from a fine movie with a plot which involves a large amount of violence or sex ("The Clockwork Orange," "Midnight Cowboy") to the typical fare at your local, all-night, hard-core movie house in which the audience usually consists of dirty-old-men with their tongues hanging out, watching their fantasies being given flesh.

R is a tricky one. Often the best movies are "R." Often the second worst movies are "R." Even in the best of these, one feels that the director or writer (Did I say the writer?) has included the "love" scenes or "punch-em-up" scenes out of a sense of obligation. The duty lies heavy on their hands and often lands with a "thud" in the middle of the plot. Fortunately, there are exceptions.

GP or PG--Most notable from the sign advertising, "Robert Redford in The Great PG Waldo Pepper." Mostly middle-of-the-road, with an anemic effort toward art.

Since Disney died, a G rated movie is usually a nature flick with a distressingly familiar plot (if any); an occasionally good documentary ("The Great American Cowboy") or one of Doty-Daytons attempts to bring art into the "G" category.

As one can see, the ratings tell everything but what the average college student wants to know--is this flick any good?

Ladies and gentlemen--I advocate a return to the good old grading system, "A-C", it was in the old days. Unfortunately, I feel the need for an extension to the letter "Z" in order to make some of our more obnoxious viewings feel at home. In these pages, I intend to attempt to give you at least one opinion of what's showing by not only reviewing most flicks in town, but to give you an "A" to "Z" rundown.

'Spirit of Independence' to show at Gallery

The exhibition of the Kent Bicentennial Portfolio "Spirit of Independence" by 12 of America's leading contemporary artists opens Tuesday, January 13 at the Boise Gallery of Art and continues through March 10, 1976.

Will Barnet, Colleen Browning, Marisol Escobar, Audrey Flack, Red Grooms, Joseph Hirsch, Robert Indiana, Alex Katz, Jacob Lawrence, Larry Rivers, Ed Ruscha, and Fritz Scholder freely interpreted the theme of the "Spirit of Independence" in a lithograph or serigraph in editions of 125 signed and numbered original prints.

The Boise Gallery of Art accepted the Kent Bicentennial Portfolio from Lorillard for their permanent collection. In the coming months, special exhibits featuring the Kent Portfolio in celebration of the nation's 200th anniversary will be opening in every state across the country.

Gallery hours are Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday and Sunday from 12 noon to 5 p.m., and Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. The Gallery is closed Mondays.

Cross country skiers wax up for a trip to the back country. Classes are offered for those wishing to learn the art by a local sporting goods store, located on the main street.

Sherman Neth, Idaho City resident, says people there are "about the friendliest likely to be found anywhere."

Discover Idaho City

The small hamlet of Idaho City, located approximately 30 miles north-east of Boise, is fast becoming the place to go for summer and winter recreation.

Cross country skiing is very popular with residents and visitors alike and ski rental is available. For those who would rather take their snow sitting down, Steam Boat Springs is available for tubers. There is a rope tow for getting back up the mountain. There is also plenty of space for snow mobilers.

During the summer, there are many camping facilities around Idaho City, also ample hiking terrain. A natural hot springs pool is located there, for swimming year round.

Indoor entertainment is also plentiful, catered by the Miners Exchange and O'Leary's taverns. Both establishments feature live entertainment on weekends.

Idaho City has a long and colorful history, at one time it was Idaho's capital city with more residents than Portland did at that time. It was founded October 6, 1862 by a band of miners headed by J. Marion More. According to residents of the city, more gold was taken out of the area than out of the Klondike. The first Masonic Lodge founded in Idaho is located in Idaho City and is open once a year.

A long time resident of the city said it has changed greatly in the last few years. "We used to go sleigh riding down main street and sled off the top of the mountain across the street," he said. That mountain is now built up with cabins and summer homes.

Sherman Neth, another long time resident of Idaho City, said land values are high, with prices depending "on the mood of the person selling."

The Idaho World is the oldest continuing newspaper in Idaho. Established in September of 1863, the Idaho World still publishes every Friday. This is a typical ad from a paper, dated 1865.

Snow is one item Idaho City has plenty of, to the delight of enthusiasts. However, snow is heavy and roofs have been known to collapse, hence the trip to the top with a snow shovel.

Cross country skiers and snow covered mountain ranges are reflected in a store window.

O'Leary's saloon has a large collection of mining paraphernalia, including picks, shovels, gold pans and an old ore car.

Senate report

Teeth, talk, tours

by George Nells

Three issues were brought up before the Senate Tuesday: teeth, too much talk, and tours. The meeting was an informal to set up guidelines for this semester's formal assemblies. The guidelines were to distinguish non-business Senate meetings where the Senators could freely discuss issues a could freely discuss issues from a regular business meeting where they would vote on the issues discussed previously. This separation of meetings would help alleviate the problem of meetings lasting two hours. The other decision was to have the Senate meeting next Tuesday at 4:30.

Ron O'Halloran, President of the Senate, the Senators that he would get tough next week if they don't hold to the Agenda. He advocated that the Senate consider strongly limiting discussion of new business until the week after it was announced. This would allow the Senate a chance to prepare discussion, also there would be a little more order. O'Halloran also stated that new business be submitted to the ASBSU office forty-eight hours before Senate meetings to give time for adequate preparation of discussion.

Nick Casner, Public Relations Director for ASBSU, came before the chamber for a discussion of tours of campus. This program would be for Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Senior citizens, and whoever else wanted to see Boise State. The tours would be led by regular students, anyone "other than Nate's case...canoe making." He had in mind something a "little more lavish than looking at the ballroom and snack bar." Lenny Hertling, School of Arts and Science, asked "why Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts?" "Show their parents how their taxes are spent," was Nick's reply.

Mark Welch gave his bi-weekly report, his statement of the Dental Care program. There would be one or two dentists, the fees would be half those of the VA standard fees, and according to Nate Kim "teeth are not worked on if they want to, only if it's an emergency."

Welch noted that at present his committee was researching eight different grant programs. He passed out a proposal containing recommendations for the BSU Dental Program, which contained this information: Proposal For B.S.U. Dental Program.

Treatment would be for emergency work only. A dentist would be hired to work 4 hours a day, 5 days a week, at approximately $20.00 per hour. Approximately 2 hours each day would be for walk-in emergencies and the other 2 hours would be scheduled appointments, to take care of patients who were previously seen during emergency appointments. The fee would be one half of the normal rate of the local dentists. It is estimated that this would take care of the cost of materials and the salary of the dentist. Assistants and receptionists would be by students who are currently enrolled in the dental assisting program at BSU and would therefore not be salaried as this would be part of their training.

It is further recommended that the dentist hired, have either one year of private practice experience, or a tour of duty in the Armed Forces or public health service as a dentist. At the end of the first year, the fee schedule and program would be re-evaluated and appropriate adjustments made.

Royanne Klein Senator, School of Arts and Science, asked for removal from the Faculty Senate.

Mike Hoffman sent the Academic Standards committee recommendation to the next Faculty Senate meeting containing the recommendation that midterm grades be mandatory for freshmen and be on record in case of request by upper classmen.

Ron O'Halloran said he might try a night Senate meeting sometime to see if it could possibly succeed. Also he recommended that anyone running for the Senate in the next elections should seriously consider taking no more than nine hours of credit.

Financial aids examined

by the Student Action Committee

How fair are BSU's financial aids programs?

In regards to both scholarship and work-study allocations that is a debatable matter.

During the current fiscal year approximately 450 scholarships will be awarded to BSU students. These scholarships will total nearly $75,000. A large number of these scholarships are funded by private donors, and there is no point in dealing with them. The scholarships with which we should be concerned are those partially or wholly funded through registration fees and money otherwise obtained from students.

In FY '76 the BSU Financial Aids Office estimates that $32,000 will be raised for the scholarship program from registration fees. Another $7,500 will be obtained from vending machine revenues. During the same fiscal year it is estimated that only $23,625 will be awarded to students on the basis of need. Presumably the remainder will be allocated on the basis of scholastic achievement. At first glance that seems fair, but is it?

Awards on achievement only?

Awards based on academic achievement might be fair is all students at BSU had and have had equal educational opportunity, but that is obviously not the case. Academic achievement in college is greatly influenced by previous educational experiences. And it's not an accident that those from the upper economic strata have had better education prior to college than those from lower economic levels. The families of upper income students can afford to live in suburban communities with a healthy tax base, and hence good schools, while poorer students have to take whatever is available wherever they're stranded.

Another thing to consider is whether or not a person has to work while she/he is attending college. As virtually anyone who has had to work part or full time during his/her college education can verify, there is an inverse relationship between the number of hours worked each week and scholastic achievement. Thus, students with rich parents have a double advantage - better prior schooling and more time to devote to their studies than those who have to work. Seen in this light scholarships based on academic achievement are a form of negative income redistribution. Funds collected from the entire student body, a majority of whom come from working class backgrounds, are being given to students who are quite probably from upper class backgrounds.

"Scholarship Parking Plan"

Questions as to how funds raised within the institution should be allocated need to be asked. By far the most interesting aspect of these questions is the disbursement of the "Scholarship Parking Plan" funds. Very little of this money has been collected from impoverished students - the only people willing and able to shell out $30 for a parking spot are undoubtedly members of the Administration, Business Dept., Education Dept. and the few other comparatively affluent individuals employed at BSU.

While the Parking Plan funds were not raised directly from students, they were raised by rental of parking facilities which should have been available to students. Thus, students should have a say in the use of these funds, but of course they do not.

At present $13,400 has been raised from parking revenues and will be disbursed as follows: $6,700 by the Financial Aids Committee; and $6,700 by the University Club. In the past the Financial Aids Committees have distributed scholarships purely on the basis of grade point averages. As indicated above, this is very unfair to lower income students.

The University Club is a creature of J. Barnes, its founder. The money disbursed by that organization will be used as a recruiting tool in the high schools. What type of individual will this money be given to - the letterman from Capitalist High or the poor Chicano from Nampa whose primary language is Spanish and who for that among other reasons has been at a disadvantage since he/she entered school? The question answers itself.

Work Study

Then there's the matter of work study. In FY '76, $272,000 has been allocated for use in the work study program at BSU. The most interesting source of these funds is $16,331 transferred from the SEOG program. The amount transferred is 10% of the amount BSU was allocated by the Dep't of Education. The maximum percentage legally transferrable is, surprisingly, 10%. Evidently, the BSU Financial Aids Office feels that work is morally uplifting for those without rich parents, even is it isn't uplifting for their G.P.A.'s.

As anyone on work study knows, wages under that program are terrible. The wage scale at BSU presently runs from $2.20 to $2.50 per hour. If you think that's bad, consider the following: BSU can legally pay student help as little as $1.87 per hour. Fortunately the Financial Aids Office is aware of the inadequacy of the present wage scale and has not chosen to make it even more intolerable than it presently is.

Another current complaint of some work study wage slaves is that their hours are being cut. The reason for this is the system by which departments and services are awarded student help. Each department and service is allotted a given amount of money per fiscal year for work study employees. If, as recently happened in the History Dept., the chairman of the dept., or whoever else is in charge of hiring, screws up and too many people are hired or the dept. overschedules present employees, someone ends up having her/his hours cut.

No Big Favor

One very important aspect of the work study program that should be considered by work study people is that the government/BSU is doing them no great favor by providing them with employment at $2.20 per hour. For the most part work study people are filling essential positions within the university - positions which would otherwise have to be filled by fulltime state employees at substantially higher wages. Of course, with unemployment running at close to 10 per cent, thanks to our "free enterprise"/Monopoly Capital economy, many students never consider the essential functions they're performing and believe themselves lucky to have a job even at starvation wages.

We have just seen one of the ways in which employment serves the State - through the work-starvation program. If anything, unemployment is a much greater boon to the giant corporations which control this country. It provides a vast pool of strikebreakers for use in labor disputes; it produces a passive, fatalistic attitude in their employees (through fear of job loss); it serves to divide the working class, as witness the widespread contempt directed towards "bums" on welfare and unemployment; and is some areas it tends to divide working people along racial lines - the current dispute over seniority in lay-offs is a good example.

ISA opens Boise office

The Idaho Student Association (ISA), representing seven Idaho colleges and universities, has opened an office in Boise for the duration of the legislative session. The executive director of the ISA, John Hecht, will be acting as a full-time lobbyist for the student organization.

The ISA was formed last summer when the Idaho Student Lobby and the Idaho Student Government Association were combined. The ISA is funded from dues paid by the student government of each school.

The students will be limiting the scope of their lobbying efforts this year, concentrating on a few specific issues. A major goal this year will be the passage of a landlord-tenant relations act.

"We feel that there will be a bill passed this year," said Hecht. "We have been in contact with representatives of the landlords, and we hope to be able to say to the legislature, 'This bill is something we all agree with.'"

A second focus will be working for the elimination of architectural barriers for the physically handicapped attending college. The ISA will also be supporting efforts which will make it easier for students to participate in any election in Idaho, and any other political process.

Absent this year will be an official position on the funding of higher education by the state. "With private and public schools in the ISA, it is difficult to lobby the legislature for more money for the state colleges," Hecht noted.

However, he will be following the budget hearings and the appropriation bills for higher education, and keep the student leaders informed of matters they might wish to address the legislators on.

The ISA will also be watching with "extreme interest" any bills introduced that provide for collective bargaining for public employees, especially college faculties. The ISA board of directors has instructed Hecht to continue "investigating" the matter.

"Until the bills are submitted, we don't know whether we will be pro or con," Hecht commented, "but there is a strong feeling that the students should be somehow included in the negotiations process if a law is passed."

ISA member schools are Boise State University, Boise; College of Southern Idaho, Twin Falls; Lewis-Clark State College, Lewiston; North Idaho College, Coeur d'Alene; Northwest Nazarene College, Nampa; Ricks College, Rexburg; and the University of Idaho, Moscow.

The annual Legislative Breakfast was held last Tuesday at Boise State. Legislators and students from around Idaho attended the event. Also in attendance were Governor Cecil Andrus, Attorney General Wayne Kidwell and BSU President John Barnes. The breakfast is held each year and is intended as a "get-acquainted" session for students and their legislators.

SUPB petition successful

A petition requesting a $3.5 million appropriation from the Idaho State Legislature to fund the Phase II portion of the BSU Science-Education complex was signed by approximately 2800 students during registration. Petition drive coordinator John Elliott stated that he and the petition committee were quite pleased with the results and wanted to thank all BSU students who signed the document.

The petition will be presented to the legislature by ASB President Nate Kim in the near future. A request that all BSU students write their legislator as a back-up measure has been made by the petition committee.

It is the committee's contention that the more input the legislature receives on the proposed facility the better BSU's chance is of getting the structure constructed.

The letter writing campaign began Wednesday, January 15 at Morrison Hall and approximately twenty letters are now in the mail. Committee spokesperson Randy Birkinbine stated that the students contacted on the campaign have been extremely responsive. "The dormitory students and the freshman class have been our biggest contributors. We on the committee find this very heartening."

Members of the committee who helped on the petition drive were Steve Robertson, Randy Kis, Randy Birkinbine, Jerry Bridges, Tom Beeler and Barb Bridwell. Committee members participating in the letter campaign are Randy Kis, Randy Birkinbine and Katrina Brown. John Elliott is acting chairperson of the overall committee. Coed cagers return from road trip

by Johnna Reeves

The Boise State women's basketball team has been on the road, winning a game against Portland State 44-42, dropping one to the Seattle Sandpipers 39-75 and coming back to smash Eastern Oregon of LaGrand 66-22.

Portland State led the Broncos 22-20 at halftime and increased their lead to 15 points, with 8 minutes remaining in the game, before Boise State started working their plays to narrow the gap.

In their next game, BSU met the Seattle Sandpipers, an AAU team made up of teachers, coaches and other outstanding basketball players in the Puget Sound area.

The Sandpipers took advantage of their experience to crush the Broncos 39-75.

The Bronco women used a balanced scoring attack and a tough defense to defeat the Mounties of Eastern Oregon 66-22. Boise State led at halftime 30-18. The defense of BSU held the Mounties to 4 points in the second half.

The games put the Bronco season record at 2-5, but Boise State is 2-0 in regional action.

Boise State matmen stay active over the holidays

by Rob Lundgren

The Boise State matmen's bid for an upset victory over nationally ranked Oregon State was dashed Saturday afternoon in the Bronco gym as two costly matches were lost in the early going which enabled the Beavers to hang on for a 22-14 win.

The highlight match of the event was a 0-0 draw at 150 lbs. Senior Bronco Dan Warren stalemated OSU's highly explosive Ziebart who was considered the favorite to win. Ziebart was a national placewinner for the Beavers last year and is considered a strong contender again this year.

After taking the first four bouts and then tying at 150 lbs., OSU held a comfortable 16-2 lead. However, the Bronco's staged a comeback and won the next four matches to close the gap at 16-14 in favor of the Beavers. It came down to the heavyweight matchup between the defending national champion Bielenberg of OSU and freshman Ed Ritt of the Broncos. Ritt was able to keep the score close until the final moments when Bielenberg's experience finally Ritt and resulted in a fall.

Over the Christmas holidays, the Bronco's traveled to what proved to be the toughest tournament they have entered in several years, the Washington State tournament. Iowa State, a national placewinner nearly every season came out on top while Boise State's matmen finished seventh. Placing for the Broncos were Randy Watson at 158 lbs., Tim Matthews at 177 lbs. and Steve Needs at 190 lbs. All three wrestlers earned fourth place awards.

In upcoming wrestling action, BSU's matmen will host the Idaho State Bengals Wednesday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Bronco gym. The matchup between these two clubs could very well determine the outcome of the Big Sky Tournament.

Tennis competition offered for BSU coeds

Women's tennis is a growing sport throughout the world today, and our fair state of Idaho is of course no exception to this rule. The facilities that lie in the Eastern portion of the Boise State campus are quite nice for this fast growing sport. What this is all leading to is a call for BSU coeds who are interested in participating in this activity. Anyone who would like to play tennis is urged to contact Jean Boyles either by calling her at 385-1570 or stopping by at the office, room 110 in the gym. This is a really excellent opportunity for all women who are willing to get out and enjoy themselves. Tennis anyone?

John Wooden the famed basketball coach of the University of California at Los Angeles (through the many efforts of the Programs Board) was the guest lecturer in last Thursday's portion of this year's series.

John Wooden visits Boise State for Programs Board lecture series

I was running about, trying to iron a shirt that would match my pants. The time was 4:30 and I hadn't even started my car. I was supposed to be there at 4:30.

After a frantic drive across town I ran up the stairs to the second floor of the SUB, where I was to meet John Elliott, one of the people with whom I was to have dinner. John explained that I had been misinformed. In fact, the dinner wasn't until 5:30, so I wandered into the snack bar and drank coffee for awhile.

5:30 arrived, I was located by John, and we were off to have dinner with the winningest coach in basketball history, John Wooden. Mr. Wooden was the head basketball coach at UCLA for twenty eight years.

We arrived at the hotel where Mr. Wooden was staying, and parked in front of his room. The door opened and an elderly smiling man appeared. So this was the man who coached his way to ten NCAA Basketball Championships, seven of them in a row. He has won .815 per cent of all the games he has ever coached.

John Wooden got into our car, in the back seat next to me, and

I found myself lacking for words. I definitely am not a great conversationalist. I tried to make small talk, and small it was.

As the evening progressed, I became more relaxed. The man impressed me so with his style and poise that I couldn't help but feel comfortable. He showed me what he was made of as he started to talk. I thought he would talk about his career and himself. Rather, he spoke of the love and respect he has for those who have played for him. He spoke of the humorous moments, the touching moments, and some of the sad moments. So this is the man who made Lew Alcindor, Bill Walton, Rafer Johnson, and many others.

On the ride back from dinner, John Wooden talked about making up one's mind. He said that what's important is to take time when making a decision. And once the decision has been made, stick to it.

After dropping him off so he could prepare for the lecture, I returned to the SUB and waited with anticipation for his presentation.

BSU head basketball coach, Bus Connor, introduced John

Wooden as a man who loves all that he does. Mr. Wooden began his speech with some light humor. He was poised, collected, and very warm. He spoke of success, and how to achieve it. He said that success is peace of mind in knowing you have done your very best.

I was impressed by the eloquent manner with which he delivered his message. With an intermingling of the poetry of Grantland Rice (Wooden's favorite sports writer and one of the few sports writers who wrote in verse) and his own fluid style of speech, he defined such components of success as cooperation, work, and patience.

He had a rapport with the audience, and when he finished, he opened up for questions from the audience. The question and answer period ended when the audience ran out of questions - not when John Wooden ran out of answers.

Mr. Wooden gave one of the best lectures I've attended at Boise State, and the reason is the man is the greatest coach in the history of college basketball.

This lecture was provided for the students by the Lectures Committee of the Student Union Programs Board.

Big Sky representatives attend NCAA Convention

Big Sky representatives converge on St. Louis, Mo. this week for renewed National Collegiate Athletic Association meetings. Athletic directors, faculty representatives, presidents, and the Conference Commissioner will attend the meetings from Wednesday through Saturday night.

The meetings are a continuation of those held last summer, where business and motions before the NCAA Convention were not completed.

Among the items expected to be acted upon is the creation of a Division I-A in football. Under that concept, the "super powers" of collegiate football would be relegated to Division I status, a new division of I-A would be created for teams that are now either Division I or Division II, but who do not compete on the "super" level, with the current Division II and Division III categories to remain approximately the same.

The Big Sky Conference is expected to join the new I-A Division, if it is created. The Conference has petitioned the NCAA in the past for Division I status.

The Conference is already Division I in basketball and the other sports it participates in.

BSU's Pat Hoke in tenth place in Pizza Hut Classic

Indiana All-America Scott May and Texas-El Paso standout Gary Brewster have established precarious early voting leads for berths on the East and West senior squads scheduled to collide April 5 in the fifth annual Pizza Hut Basketball Classic at the Las Vegas Convention Center.

May, leader of the No. 1 ranked Hoosiers, tops the nation with 13,280 votes but is under immediate siege from Vanderbilt All-Southeastern Conference guard Butch Feher (13,214) and Wisconsin rebounding wizard Dale Koehler (13,175).

In the West, Brewster has only a slightly more comfortable lead with 12,672 votes. The 6-foot-8 forward is most closely pursued by a pair of excellent guards, Kansas State's Chuckie Williams (11,951) and Oregon's Ron Lee (10,834).

The top eight votegetters on each squad when balloting ends on March 8 are extended automatic invitations to participate in the NCAA and NAIA-sanctioned contest. The other two players per team are added as at-large selections. Indiana's Bobby Knight and Kansas State's Jack Hartman will direct the attacks.

Players representing the states of Indiana and Tennessee dominate the top spots in the East voting. May's teammate Quinn Buckner is sixth with 12,048 votes and Indiana State's Rick Williams is 14th with 9,144. Middle Tennessee's Tim Sisneros is fourth at 12,562. Feher's Vandy running mate Jeff Fosnes is fifth (12,156).

Tennessee Tech's Frank Jones is seventh and Memphis State's Bill Cook is eighth.

Rounding out the top eight in the West are Oral Roberts' Willis Collins, Louisiana State's Ed LeBlanc, UCLA's Andre McCarter, Colorado's Dave Logan and Texas A&M's Sonny Parker. Voting at the nation's 2,100 Pizza Hut restaurants and participating universities will cast a projected 2.5 million ballots. Voting leaders, by squad and rank:

Cagers win two, drop one

Arriving in Bozeman for Friday's game (January 9) with Montana State, the Bronco courtmen were greeted by very cold air and that funny white stuff that is on the ground this time of year. This was the opening game of the Big Sky Conference basketball season for both clubs. To the dismay of the Montana State Bobcats, Boise State walked away the victor.

The scoring for the Boise State portion of the game was done well starting off with Pat Hoke and his 18 points, followed by Dan Jones with 14 points. Steve Connor brought in third place honors for the Broncos with 12 points and was trailed by two other BSU cagers with 11 points each; those being Terry Miller and Trent Johnson.

The following night the BSU cagers downed the University of Montana Grizzlies leaving Boise State in a tie for first place in the Big Sky.

The Broncos carried this tie into last Saturday's contest against Idaho State.

The Bronco attack wasn't quite good enough to stop the Bengals. The half time score was ISU 43 - BSU 32. Scoring for BSU was led by the efforts of Dan Jones with 20 points. Steve Connor had 16 points for the Broncos couldn't do it, ISU won 71-65. This is the first conference setback for the Bronco squad.
