Evans opposes tuition; supports alcohol policy

by Rick Mattison

Governor John Evans said in a recent interview that he believes students should not have "to pay tuition to enter college. He said that this would dissuade some students from entering school, and noted that Maharishi's "program is working in the past and would be willing to do the same." Evans added that fee increases is another matter. He sees fees generally going up, as the need arises.

Evans supported the State Board of Education and its emergency procedures concerning alcoholic on campus. He said that students should be allowed to hold liquor in the privacy of their dormitory rooms, but feels that allowing alcohol on other parts of the campus, including the student union, would downgrade the educational programs, and give Idaho people the "imaging image of their colleges.

Evans also supports the State Board of Education's exemption from the Administrative Procedures Act (APA), to some degree. Evans said members of the Board and discussed issues which the Board had to deal with under the APA. He noted the scheduling of classes as one of these.

On the question of a student appointed to the Be. C. Board of Education Evans said this as unnecessary. He noted that in consultation with Evans has the "free opportunity to participate and present testimony before that State Board." People must be 21 to run for the Board of Education.

Evans said that students should look at the background of the person who runs for governor. He noted that he has an excellent background as a businessman, rancher, legislator, Lt. Governor, and the experience of serving almost 2 years as governor. He also said that students should look at what the candidate believes as far as issues are concerned. He noted the three areas of environmental control, energy, and education as issues he will deal with.

Evans believes in conserving the "beautiful environment the State has." He gave the lower Snake River area as an example where he would like State oversight and control of that area to keep it in wild and scenic. He said that development that would create environmental harm. He also added that the area of the Central Idaho Wilderness would involve over 2 million acres for protection.

Evans said that the State should delay the construction of a coal-fired plant and secure energy from other areas. He gave hydroelectric energy and geothermal energy as two prime sources of energy can be made available from. He noted that the White River area close to Boise where a generator can be built for hydroelectric energy.

He said another is the Shoshone site near Buhl where a dam could be constructed for multi-purpose use. Evans noted that the Bonneville Power Administration will soon be selling energy to preferred customers. Government or private institutions can be regarded as preferred customers. Evans would like to see Idaho's governmental departments enter this program. He said it would reduce the "energy cost on Idaho's citizens.

Evans said he would like to see an increase in public school support at the state level, thus reducing support at the local and property tax level. He added that he would like to strengthen the Department of Employment so that when students graduate, they can go to the Department and they and prospective employers can use it as a "clearing house.

Next week: Evans's main opponent for governor will be featured.

KBSU gets on air shock

by Rod Dancyberry

KBSU radio and its listeners got a mild shock on September 27 when Manager Moore gave notice over the air on her early afternoon show that she was quitting.

Moore, who had been with the Boise State University station since it started broadcasting, said there was adverse reaction to her program and she believes the announcers were "getting together" to force her out of her position.

Program director Bob Campbell said, "The only people that you can threaten against Mona was her audience." "We have all these different interests," said Campbell. "Daytime programming in radio is general. We don't get involved in special programming in the middle of the afternoon," he said. Moore's program had its own audience, but some listeners thought it a special program and they couldn't relate to anything she was playing," Moore herself, who described her musical tastes as "anything but hard rock," said the purpose of her show was exposure of music that was not familiar in Boise—blues, country, ethnic and feminist music.

"There's a minority of people, but they are there, that know this music. (I played) music for the minority, and music for the majority who had never heard it," she noted.

When she was informed that her programming was unsatisfactory for the time it was being presented, she was offered "special programs in the evenings, but there really wasn't any evening I could work.'

Dave Schwartz, general manager of KBSU, stated that the "progressive" aspect of the station was "built over a period of time; everything of music we have available...withdrawing from rock to jazz to country rock to folk, and keep it revolving. And do it in such a manner that the audience doesn't get bored. That's progressive; that's artistry."

In light of the "Bobcat Massacre" staged at Bronco Stadium Saturday evening, Boise fans can once again hold their heads high while conversing football jargon amongst friends. Ahh... Big Sky Champions once again. Bronco spirits have been lifted to the heights and that certainly is good news to Francis Scott Key, author of the national anthem.

At the Nevada Las Vegas-BSU game, as is customary, the Star Spangled Banner began and the announcer asked everyone to sing. Well, not very many people wished to participate. In fact, if it hadn't been for the music, over 20,000 people would have been standing in a stadium with "hand over heart," looking at a flag. In total silence. I'm not sure why this was the case; however, it's interesting to note that the Broncos had suffered a terrible defeat the week before and the fans spirits were somewhat low. This past Saturday marked an improvement in the crowds participation in the singing of the Anthem...somewhat weak, but never the less an improvement. It could also be said that the masses were in high spirits after the unprecedented win over... Nevada Las Vegas the previous week. Now by all means, if the Broncos go on to win their next two games, the Northern Arizona-BSU home game should begin with an all time high crowd participation of the National Anthem. Better practice at home because the embarrassment will, come to those that don't sing versus those cantors of the past games.

Garbage glut chokes Americans by Mike Hughes

Two bodies glide effortlessly thru the crystal clear mountain lake. The sun plays with the ripples caused by the fan shaped wake, the powerstroke of the swimmers drawing them closer to shore. They run up the sandy beach, water droplets dancing across their glistening bodies; a look of acute enchantment is conveyed as they stare into each other's eyes. Slowly they move closer to each other, ready to embrace, wanting to hold this moment forever. Suddenly a cry of, "Geezus!" pierces the air—the romantic interlude occupies a back seat to the screeching pain brought on by an unseen pop to the searing pain. Brussels sprouts. The mystery of the centurys where to put the ever increasing mound of junk? Typical trash, my friends, trash! Curse of our forefathers, never-ending haven for vermin of all sizes and shapes! Hordes of litterbugs infiltrating our schools, stealing our young, creating a future generation of package pitchers. The mystery of the century where to put the ever increasing mound of junk? Typical of the Seventies that an ages old problem should become a central issue in this resource depleted decade. Before you throw this paper on the ground (if you're one of the offender), you might want to read on; there might just be a cure for this horrible affliction.

The garbage glut has all kinds of people worried these days. Not only Congress and local governments, but engineers, scientists, water hydrologists, clergymen and citizen action groups are only a few of the furrowed brows. As for you and I, the writing is on the wall, a subtle portend that things aren't what they used to be. These engraved tombs, poor dollars, are no longer a memory by the mid-80's. With our current recycling efforts accounting for a seven percent return rate, lawmakers see the landfill abolition as a starting point to upgrade our recovery rate to 25 percent. Much of this would be accomplished by phasing out nonreturnable bottles and cans, along side a massive paper reclamation effort. Manufacturers of containers are also looking into ways to make longer lasting, more durable packages. Likewise the tinier metal used in car bodies is in conjunction with these efforts.

So what can you do starting today? One obvious method is to keep the wrappers and packages you use during the day pressed close to your heart until a container comes into view. If you're a resident of the North End of Boise, start collecting your newspaper and aluminum. Through the combined energies of several locals, house to house collection will be offered to residents within the project area. The boundaries for this source separation exercise are Fort St. on the south, Hill Road on the north, Eighth Street on the east and Harrison Boulevard on the west. The thrust of this experiment was conceived by the organizers to be an opportunity for local citizens to participate in a recovery effort without having to do anything more than just the initial separation. The regular trash collector, Mel Parks, is donating the trucks and manpower to see if door to door collection can get off the ground in the City of Trees. Shenandoah: musical for MSTI

Editor, the ARBITER

Boise State University has recently been asked to take an active part in the cancer donation drive for Mountain State Tumor Institute. The community is heading this drive to provide new equipment for the MSTI. BSU's own Fred Norman is directing a musical for this purpose. The musical is "SHENANDOAH" which is a story of freedom and the struggle to find it. This musical is an award winning musical and Broadway hit.

The ASBSU has developed a strong sense of commitment to this cause and we feel that every student on this campus should at least have a relative understanding of the magnitude of this dreaded disease all we are aware of, if not personally touched by. The community has offered to allow BSU to have the first night's showing of the musical for their own personal donations. The MBA food service has agreed to provide one of the finest meals money can buy to go along with our first nights showing of "SHENANDOAH." The meal and the show will be provided to all BSU students, faculty, and their wives or husbands, custodians, and administrators. Ticket sales will be announced prior to November 10, 1977.

This cause is growing rapidly as the coordinator of this event, work to raise public and national consciousness. Boise State this year wants to come closer to the majority of students want to buy to go along with our ears which we care enough to give 100 and 10% for the Greater Victory this school has ever attempted, "Defeating Cancer in our own Life Time!"

P.S. On October 6, 1977 in the Nez Perce room from 3 to 5 p.m., all interested parties and organizations are invited to an Orientation on BSU's role of Shenandoah.

Sincerely yours,

KBSU P.R. Director

KBsu offers variety

Editor, the ARBITER:

There are some people who listen to a lot of music. I am one such person. There are movements in the trends of young music today which KBSU does not notice of. They are right up in the latest releases of contemporary music.

I have heard a variety of music, and bought albums as a result of listening to KBSU. Here are a few of the people I've heard:

- P.D.Q. Bach
- George Teleman
- Weather Report, Keith Jarrett
- P.D.Q. Bach
- George Telemann
- B.B. King
- Charlie Musslewhite
- Firesign Theatre
- Monty Python
- Bob Marley
- Betty Miller

I have listened to everything from rock opera, country, and disco music, although I don't like it much.

They do play an awful lot of rock, but that's the path of music many of the people at KBSU have grown up with (a lot of it is good, good, by the way). Sure KBSU has few faults yet, but everyone who loves music has his own conception of what the perfect radio station would play. None exist, however, so a person has to buy records. They'll never be able to play what everyone wants but KBSU is trying to give the listeners what they feel is quality, which is something most Boise stations don't care. I hate, detested hearing the same song over and over for four months. I heard that the dorms voted for that kind of situation so you know where their heads are at (no offense to the top dorms).

I Hate Spam, Alice Fairchild

Apology extended

To the public:

In the September 19th issue of the Arbiter, a letter was published from officer X. It concerned his apprehensions with Idaho drivers.

The letter was written and intended to be a private joke. To any and all parties offended by this entirely ficticious letter, the humblest possible apology is extended. Hoffman tells all

Fellow students:

During my years of involvement in student government, I have continually been frustrated by the poor lines of communication between the student government and its constituents. There exists no effective method by which the feelings of the general student body can be ascertained. Because of this the executive and legislative branches of the ASBSU are constantly making decisions for people whose thoughts they know little about. It is therefore impossible for the person involved in the decision-making process of the student government to know whether or not they are pursuing the programs the students want them to pursue, voting on issues the majority of students want them to vote, etc. In short, we have no way to gauge the degree to which we are successfully meeting the needs of the general student body.

In an effort to combat this problem, I am setting up an organizational council, i.e. a meeting of representatives from all recognized campus organizations at which issues of interest to the community and the country together in this battle and show our efforts in our drive for the cause we're attacking.

MSTI! The homecoming committee has formally dedicated the community and the country to provide new equipment for the State Tumor Institute. Sophomore metamorphosis seen

by Sally Thomas

You can always tell a freshman by his eager, trusting look. You can always tell a senior by his worn and dusty book. You can always tell a sophomore but you can’t tell him much.

Somehow this little ditty, which I’ve heard since high school, doesn’t seem as funny to me this year as it did last year. Maybe the fact that I’m in my second year of college has something to do with its loss of humor. And I guess this year as—it did last year. Although they do know all the second year of college has an idea that sophomores think they are going to college by the skin of their teeth. The ones who.

John H. Connell, sophomore: Yes, I think that BSU needs a pavilion. I think that (the students) should not have to pay for more than ¼ of the total cost.

Victor Ross, sophomore: Yes, I think they (BSU) should have one. I think it would be interesting, but what would be placed in the pavilion? Would it be a skating rink, indoor tennis courts? I know that we already have a swimming pool. I think that half of the price of the pavilion should be paid by the student and the other half by the State of Idaho or the Federal government.

DeeDee Dillon, sophomore: It is going to be hard on the student who doesn’t have very much money. And I can see us voting on it now and having the people of the future paying for it. So maybe there ought to be some other way to fund it besides the students funding it. But I don’t know how much the students could bring in, or if it could even be feasible. But one thing I am concerned with is the students that are going to college by the skin of their teeth. The ones who don’t have any extra money to be putting into the fund. So I don’t see how it (the fee) could be too high. Maybe $10 a semester, but would that do it?

Wee Yeates, junior: This is my first year down here and I don’t know what Boise has to offer. So I really don’t know what they have out at the fairgrounds. Like Moscow, Idaho — it is a small town and so they have to build everything around the University to house any kind of large function, it has to be all contained within the University. Here it would be a lot more convenient to have something like that here on campus or close to the college for those people who don’t have any transportation. $10 a semester would be good; then try to make it self-supporting.

Marilyn Loevestig, sophomore: It’s something that the community needs and could be used by both BSU and the community. There has been an argument that when the community tried to put it through and it didn’t wash, but I really think it is needed. I think there are a number of speakers and entertainers that could use the pavilion. I think that the students should contribute something, but that would be very hard to say until we knew the overall cost. I don’t think that the students should have to pay for the whole thing. I don’t think that it should exceed more than ... say $20 a year for the student.

THE ROVING REPORTER

QUESTION: Would you like BSU to have a multi-purpose pavilion? If so, what should the student contribution be?

by Andy Desilet

Chris Holway, sophomore: I have always favored a multi-purpose pavilion. In a way I guess I am selfish, because I don’t know what the student contributions would be. I think that everybody has a tendency to want something for nothing, and that is kind of my feelings too. I want to get it, but I don’t want to have to pay for it.

Steve Seyen, sophomore: I think it would be good for the college. I think that they should raise the tuition in order to get some contribution, maybe $25 or $30 a semester.

We have the time, really we do!

by Jean King

Whoever said, "Women are like wise, they don't get older, just get better," was at least thinking in the right direction even if he seems to be playing women in the category of possessions. American society's preoccupation with our youth-oriented culture is unfair to both the young and the older person.

The socialization process would have us believe that the only attractive bodies are those that have only recently acquired their body form. It would have us also believe that the only options which are valid are those expressed in voices that are still cracking. The only minds to be concerned with are those whose major concern is still with football. (This is possible at any chronological age, however.)

Library issues discussed

Nevertheless, issues such as hours, services and information resources relevant to teacher's, students, staff and administrators. "Old Petroto" is obviously not alone in wanting expanded hours the Saturday night; although in terms of some degree various competing needs exist. The Faculty Library Committee has student representation appointed by the Associated Student Body, I encourage students to use this means of communication and I also welcome students to write to me personally to make respective needs known.

Seriously, they're seeking input and trying to gauge city-wide interest.

Final food for thought—if you think recycling is some solution, except that you'll need to talk to, and be convinced by, knowledge. Boise Civic Opera presents La Traviata
by Terry McGuire

With the help of outstanding individual performances and animated chorus arrangements, the Boise Civic Opera presented La Traviata, with some minor acoustic difficulties hindering an otherwise professional performance.

Kathryn Bouleyn in the role of Violetta was surprisingly adept. A trained voice to be sure, it echoed through the Capital High auditorium with power and tempered clarity; a sweet melodic voice in the classical vein of Maria Callas or Beverly Sills. Miss Bouleyn handled the demanding role well. Sam Thompson, well known to Boise music buffs and students alike, complemented Miss Bouleyn with an open measure of resonance and grace. His role as Alfredo is as challenging as any in the operatic world and suffered not from Thompson's fine tenor voice. We're lucky indeed to have Thompson's expertise in Boise productions.

Neil Wilson as Alfredo's father Giorgio brought the link needed by the production to round out the three major parts. Filling the role of protagonista, protagonist, with gestures of subtle wickedness and melancholy bitterness, Wilson brought a tight, astute force to the difficult second act; it is one of the toughest for both audience and performers to get through, but it was carried out by Wilson as well as Bouleyn. The chorus, filled with professionals and amateurs alike, was magnificent: the ball scene returned to form, although the acoustic placement of his musicians lent difficulty to both performers and audience; in La Traviata the smallness of the auditorium hindered the clarity of the translated words. Sam Thompson seemed able, however, to rise above the strings with professional savvy, adapting his voice to the rising momentum of the orchestration.

In all the audience appreciated the performance; hopefully the positive response will spark interest in more productions in the operatic vein. Many of the crowd had probably never seen an opera, but judging by their enthusiasm, will attend many more if they are made available; as a sometimes member of the San Francisco War Memorial Opera House Dress Circle, I have seen more elaborate, better orchestrated pieces, yet Boise's "La Traviata" was performed with equal vigor and genuine delight. Bravo.

The show consists of abstract and representational paintings by Rasmussen. Ceramic art objects are presented by Professor Elsner of Utah State University. Rasmussen's paintings are mostly nature-abstracts with emphasis on the microscope world. The paint appears to be just thrown at the canvas, but contemplation of his works may yet realize they have been carefully thought out.

Elsner's ceramic pieces are very earthy, simple, and basic. The blend of shapes, earth colors, and textures create subtle, grand works of art.

"The Witnesses"

Directed by Frederic Rossif; original title: "Le Temps du Ghetto;" English version directed by Thomas Craven; screenplay by Madeleine Chapsal; English adaptation by Vince Pereira; music by Maurice Jarre. English narration by Viveca Lindfors and Michael Tolan.

Frederic Rossif (TO DIE IN MADRID, THE ANIMALS) compiled this startling film from footage taken by the Germans in the Warsaw Ghetto between 1940 and 1943. It depicts the unmitigated torment suffered by 600,000 Jews, all but 500 of whom died at the hands of the Nazis. Survivors tell of their shocking experiences; and Madeleine Chapsal's poetic screenplay heightens the impact of their words.

"... it documents Jews attempting to maintain their religious practices, the education of their young, picking up their dead from the streets, attempting always to save a few from among the many, and always, somehow to survive ... How much greater this bravery is than the bravery of the warrior is up to the viewer to decide. Frederic Rossif makes very little comment of his own. Comment is hardly necessary." -- Hollis Alpert, Saturday Review

Book lacks personal awareness

by Tony McGuire

Had Charles Reich not attempted his now famous work, The Greening of America, he may have floated away into relative obscurity. That not being the case, his sequel, The Sorceror of Bolinas Reef, came to my attention by the strength of the author's name alone.

I try to cast no aspersions on the name of Charles Reich, but the book held no grace; it's virtue lay safely in not being tossed aside before the initial printing.

Admittedly I come forth now to say that I had never read Greening; but having knowledgeable sources that it's message was good enough, as it turned out, to carry Reich's name to the best-seller list in 1970. I conclude that is pruned, at least somewhat, the authoring of Bolinas. It would be impossible to make cross-comparisons of the two works. Suffice it to say that Bolinas left me beyond words. Had Charles Reich not attempted his latest, and I speculate enjoyed it. Perhaps for you his meta-physical feeling, that no message came through, some esoteric interpretation of his life, never his book. Have you ever read a book, tried to read the writing on a page, not knowing the direction of his life or his book. Have you ever tried to read the writing on a car of a moving roller-coaster? Take him, such experiences await.

Taking the mood of the book to heart, I held a dreamy frame of mind all through it: the shots of spiritual awareness fail to uplift the reader even though Reich or perhaps his collaborators real doubt spliced them carefully in to the text.

Basically it holds validity as an autobiographical tour through a lonely man's life: from Washington lawyer, to enlightened Yale professor (post-1967) to a disillusioned ghost haunting the Polk Street section of the City by the Bay. San Franciscans or those familiar with it know what that means. No doubt most of Reich's UC/Berkeley experience fuelled Greening, but it burnt to a dull, somber brown in the conception of Bolinas.

If the reader weren't burdened with continual, depressing reminiscences of the Washington days, then the over-dramatized, over-played sexual scenes turned into a testimonial of a moving roller-coaster? Take him, such experiences await.

One minute Reich is accounting intense personal emotions, then in a blink of an eye is off castigating the evils of modern America. No transition lends itself as a bridge: the continual topoy-topsy flow of the book did, however, lend itself to my exasperation and eventually to my case against Reich.

As soon as I am settling into a Reich lecture concerning the lack of personal awareness (that gives me no sense of purpose, according to him) I find myself on a reef north of San Francisco. Charles is at least now as he was forty years back. The search has taken no turn for the better, no seeming direction, just along the path again. The sorceror has shown me no magic; he has alienated the reader, made him tense and uneasy. There is a passage that best exemplifies Bolinas in terms of its substance: "...I imagined myself Captain Charles, ruler of the universe, with flying ships and a magic wand."

Circa 1940, has anything changed since? Not so.

Grizzlies anticipate BSU Broncos

by Fredric Vincent
Arbiter Sports Editor

The Boise State University Broncos travel to Missoula this weekend to face the Montana Grizzlies at Dornblaster stadium. Last year's contest was "One hell of a game," according to one fan in the stands, in which the Grizzlies defeated Boise State 17-14 on a last minute field goal.

A blend of seasoned veterans and promising new players gives the University of Montana much to look forward to in 1977. The Grizzlies have another big and impressive offensive line, experience at the quarterback position and some young but experienced defensive players.

The offensive line is the most experienced area on the Grizzly squad. Four seniors and one sophomore are expected to start. Tackles Ben Harnish (6'6", 260) and Merrill Pixley (6'6", 260) are headed for what should be their finest season at Montana. Center Ron Leinsoek (6'2", 223) and 1976 Big Sky second team guard Terry Falcon (6'5", 265) complete the fourosome of senior linemen. All are conference honors candidates.

Sophomore letterman Guy Bingham (6'2", 235) has nailed down the other guard spot. Montana's offensive line should be one of the finest in Division II football. But the Grizzlies must drop two games and won only one since the start of the season, losing to UNLV and Northern Arizona. Their win was over Portland State by a 40-25 margin. Still, this is only the early part of the season, so Montana may get it together.

In the Quarterback department Mike Roban has the size (6'2", 200) and speed (4.6 in the 40) to be outstanding. Roban saw part-time action last year. Junior Tim Kett (5'10", 175) walked on this past spring and did an outstanding job. He earned an athletic grant-in-aid and a shot at the number one position. Sophomore Pat Sullivan and three promising freshmen will give the Grizzlies plenty of future depth at quarterback.

The backfield was hardest hit by graduation. Four running backs who rushed for 1,618 yards last season must be replaced. Sophomore Doug Egbert and junior college transfer Monty Butler will share the duties at tailback. Junior Grant Kickhaefer has switched from tight end to fullback. Sophomores Greg Bitar and Wayne Harper Jr. will provide an opportunity to be the number one fullback.

The graduation of Paul Cooley, UM's finest single-season pass receiver, opens up the position. Sophomore Pat Sullivan and three promising freshmen will fill at tight end. Sophomore Doug Egbert and junior college transfer Monty Butler will share the duties at tailback. Junior Grant Kickhaefer has switched from tight end to fullback. Sophomores Greg Bitar and Wayne Harper Jr. will provide an opportunity to be the number one fullback.

The BSU women's field hockey team opens its home schedule this weekend hosting a round robin invitational tournament Friday and Saturday.

In addition to the BSU team, also attending will be Washington State, Brigham Young University and Idaho and Northern Arizona University. Their win was over Portland State by a 40-25 margin. Still, this is only the early part of the season, so Montana may get it together.

"This should be a good tournament with a lot of good, well-played hockey," commented Coach Jayne Van Wassenhove. "All the teams are very strong. BYU and WSU are traditionally strong and U of I is improving all the time," she added. "I think we will play really well. We looked good in the first by the gyn. Saturday, the games are on the armour with BYU at 10:00 and WSU at 2:30. Sophomore Alice Myers scored two goals to lead the BSU team.

The JV team tied the College of Idaho 1-1 when they met at Set 28 in Caldwell. Sophomore Linda Hampton scored the lone goal for BSU. "With it being the first game, they played really well," commented Coach Trina Methals. "With another week of practice we should be able to beat their varsity, the same team we played last week."

That rematch is scheduled for this Wednesday at 4:00 on the field by the gym.

Cross country second to Oregon at Lane CC

by Charlie Wittmer

The Boise State University cross country team, running in a very classy field, finished second in the Lane Community College Invitational last Saturday. The University of Oregon was the winner after a meet with only 15 points. Boise State was second with 63 points and Oregon State University was third with 82. The University of Portland was fourth with a total of 94 points while Pudget Sound was fifth with 119.

The race featured many of the top runners in the nation, including one Olympian, Alberto Salazar of the University of Oregon, who was the winner with a time of 29 minutes and 22 seconds. Craig Virgin, who competed at the 1976 Olympic Games in Montreal and now running for the Nike Track Club, finished second with a time of 29:27. Steve Colliner led the Broncos with a seventh place finish at 31 minutes flat. Scott Blackburn was the next runner for Boise State when he finished ninth. Blackburn’s time for the 10,000 meter course was 33:31. Karl Knapp was the Bronco’s third man when he placed 12th at 32:23. Dave Steffens and Stan Link were the Bronco’s fourth and fifth men as Steffens placed 16th and Link came in 20th.

Mike Henry and Gene Stone also ran in the meet and were the Bronco’s sixth and seventh men.

The race was run on a course that was wet and muddy from excessive rain the day before. Although there were two elevations the runners had to cross, the course was mostly flat. There were over 200 competitors in the race which made the start of the contest a picture of mass confusion. The runners gradually spread out over the 6 mile course, however, so that the finish was not nearly so crowded.

Coach Ed Jacoby was pleased with his team performance, noting that the gap between the 5th and 6th runners for the team was starting to lessen. The Broncos’ next meet will be at Missoula, Montana when they run against the University of Montana. Montana is rated by many to be a strong contender for the Big Sky Conference crown and should be a real test for Jacoby and his young team.

October first was a clear, cool night at Bronco Stadium when the National Champions Montana State Bobcats came to play the Broncos. The Bobcats brought 3 wins under their belt including a impressive 24-14 victory over Fresno State, the same team that annihilated the Broncos 2 weeks earlier, 42-7. Unfortunately for the Bobcats, they didn't realize the Broncos were patiently awaiting their arrival. Starting with the opening kickoff, B.S.U. gave M.S.U. a reception they would never forget, sending the Defending National Champions home as shut out losers 26-0. The Broncos were not alone, they were supported by the largest crowd ever to watch a Big Sky Conference game of 20,552 on lookers. Twenty three out of the twenty six points scored came in the first half. With 10:36 to play in the 1st quarter Fred Goode took the ball 6 yards for the first points of the game, after Tom Sarette kicked the extra point the score was Boise 7, MSU 0. Nick Androlowitz also got into the act when, with 13:39 to play in the second quarter, he ran the ball over from 1 yard out to up the score to 13-0. Sarette missed the extra point. Less than 3 minutes later Hoskin Hogan hit Steve Woodard with a 3 yard pass, after Sarette made this one good, the score was moved to 20-0. Tom Sarette then connected on a 27 yard field goal with 5:37 remaining in the half making the score: Boise 23-Montana State 0 at half time. The last three points came with 2:36 remaining in the third quarter of play when Sarette kicked a 32 yarder finishing the scoring for the night.

Personal standouts for the offense were: q.b. Hoskin Hogan who completed 8 out of 16 passes for 88 yards and 1 touchdown, R.B. Cedric Minter gained 105 yards on 17 carries, R.B. Fred Goode gained 95 yards on 18 carries, and Punt Returner Mike Brady returned 4 punts for 49 yards. This week the Broncos added to their squad a new punter named Cory Bridges, a freshman from Coeur d'Alene who punted 5 times for 139 yards. Defensive standouts were: S5 Sam Miller 12 tackles, LB Willie Beamon had 13 tackles and a fumble recovery, LB Dave Williams had 8 tackles and the interception that set up the first T.D., and NG Doug Scott made 8 tackles. Along with Beamon, Ed Deine also recovered a MSU fumble.

When the final gun sounded the Broncos committed 8 infractions for 111 yards, while the Bobcats only committed 4 penalties for a mere 38 yards.
