If the renovation of the freight elevator in the science building will comply with the mandatory building code as stated in Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 for handicapped accessibility why will a second, centrally located elevator be completed by December in the two story building?

This question has been bothering several student taxpayers and faculty in the geology-geophysics engineering and math departments since construction on the elevator has begun to disrupt space allocation in the building.

According to ASSBU President Bob Perez, the problem of the rickety elevator has been on the agenda to be repaired since 1973, and now the State of Idaho's Capital Improvements fund has granted $80,000 to bring the building up to compliance with the mandatory building code. Perez says, "It's my understanding that one elevator is enough, and it was a judgement call by the administration to build two elevators."

In a press release from the office of Asa M. Rayle, Vice President for Financial Affairs and Bursar, stated that the new elevator was to "provide physically disabled students better access to the second floor," and later in the release he said "it will accommodate heavy student traffic from the business education and new science buildings and the dormitories."

In the following Interview:

"Lot of Issues. We, that is Steve Truby, you think the issues are. Steve Arbiter, by Patrick Cox

TRUBY: Sure I do. Almost any spending is inflationary once you get past the balance. We have a half a trillion dollar debt, and there's no question that we're going to have to cut our spending back in some areas. Mr. Symms voted for the B-1 bomber, that's 25 billion dollars. Our total deficit this year was 30 billion. He would have added 25 billion to that.

TRUBY: Steve Symms seems to be concerned that the Federal Reserve System is doing its job. Do you have a view on that?

SYMMS: Well, there's not a good understanding of the free market philosophy. When I started running in 72, I was saying things that everyone is saying now. In politics, you are what you seem like, the image that the media presents to the public. So when people are interviewing you or writing articles about you that don't understand what you're talking about, they can give a little misinformation. Look, I'm socially liberal, I believe in freedom. I'm a classical liberal. Roy Truby is the authoritarian in this race. He's the one that wants to plan peoples lives. I'm the one that wants people to plan their own lives and be responsible for their own actions. There's a clear choice for the voters. Now it's very interesting that he's trying to pick up a few things and paint me as a big spender. That's almost laughable."

EVANS: Well, obviously, it would depend entirely on who replaced Bob Lenaghan. During the time that (Gov.) Andrus served as governor of the State of Idaho, the Public Utilities Commission changed its role. Prior to Governor Andrus becoming governor, the Public Utilities Commission was very much industry-oriented; whatever the utilities needed and wanted, the Utilities Commission tried to satisfy their demands. Their position has changed now to where it’s a consumer-oriented commission, and they’re recognized as being fair with the utilities... but they’re not giving in; they’re not selling out as it had been the case for many, many years. For example, if we had had an industry-oriented commission when the coal-fired plant came before it in 74 or 75, you know what would have happened; it would have been approved; we would have had a coal-fired plant 30 miles south of Boise polluting this valley. People have to recognize that my opponent is industry-oriented; he’s receiving his principal support, and always has received his principal support, from the utilities.

ARBITER: Would you have any comment on Larsen’s charge that Lenaghan has been driving staff members away from the PUC?

EVANS: I don’t think that’s right. Mr. Lenaghan is a tough manager, and if people aren’t doing the kind of job he expects them to do, he drives them to do it or stepping aside. And I think that’s the kind of management we need in state government. He’s doing a good job.

Over the years, we’ve had to have additional people there (the PUC) to represent the interests of the consumers. You don’t go into these cases without having properly trained personnel, engineers, rate-reviewers... these are all highly specialized people; the utilities usually hire those people away from the Utilities Commission. We’ve got to have a higher salary schedule to keep those people on (the) staff. I think that’s the kind of management we need in state government. Mr. Lenaghan is a tough manager, and if people aren’t doing the kind of job he expects them to do, he drives them to do it or stepping aside. And I think that’s the kind of management we need in state government.

EVANS: Let’s set some priorities here: my priority for nuclear is down three or four points from the top... I talk in terms of getting our major requirements from hydro-electric power; the installation of generators increases which aren’t fully generating power today... the low-head hydro! We do have a tremendous potential.

We’ve got the possibility in Idaho of ten thousand megawatts of electrical energy which can be produced by ‘low-head hydro’. America hasn’t had to look in that direction until these last few years; it’s been done in Europe for many, many years. It’s time to bring that technology to the United States and utilize it. We can install low head hydro projects at the same cost per kilowatt or megawatt as coal-fired plants. It makes sense to move in that direction, build those smaller units and spread them out over the countryside.

I’m very supportive of the development of our geothermal energy possibilities. The possibilities are tremendous. We’re going to move in that direction very rapidly. I think the Idaho Falls River test program, which the Department of Energy is now conducting, will prove that we can use that low-heat geothermal energy in the future to produce electrical energy for Idaho and the Northwest. Those are the directions we can go. By the way we get down through all of these alternatives plus conservation, at that particular point I say let’s look at coal-fired plants, let’s look at nuclear. And I put nuclear ahead of coal because that’s a resource we have here; we have expertise in the State of Idaho to develop nuclear energy. The people of Idaho, and particularly eastern Idaho, are very supportive of the development of nuclear energy in Idaho. We don’t have any coal; we’d have to ship the coal in, and there’s both very competitive in... on...

...the federal government is taking away their freedoms. What freedoms have you lost to the federal government? Name five. What about freedom of movement? What about freedom of citizens that are stuck at home? It used to be that the markets were all around you. The bus that takes that senior Truby: I don't believe that. I think that in some cases it might, but the minimum wage today doesn't qualify you for anything but just being above starvation level. We must have a feeling for the genuinely unfortunate; I'm not talking about welfare fraud. I think we could cut back... I think the Environmental Protection Agency, in many areas has gone too far. I believe in freedom for fresh air, freedom for a clear stream. But the kind of freedom that Mr. Symms espouses... if he had been born in the 1800's in the south he would have been fighting for freedom for the plantation owners. That kind of freedom has no appeal to me at all. We march to different drummers; we were born rich and rich to stay that way. It is a great country but no one is talking about opportunity any more. The gap between the rich and the poor has been widening for the last ten years. The wealth has been concentrating in fewer and fewer hands. It's still possible to make it from a migrant laborer's shack to apple baron. It's a hell of a lot more probable to make it from apple baron's son to apple baron.

Truby: Yeah, I think that we need to provide some incentive at that level by rolling back the upper limit to 35% to provide some capital incentive. I think it provides a bigger boost to the economy when you put the money in the hands of the people who are purchasing and you create a demand for goods and services. It's just like the 1%; business and industry's taxes have been going down in Idaho, home-owners have been going up. Ten years ago home-owners paid 18% of all property taxes, now they pay 42%. I'm not against giving business and utilities tax relief, I just don't like a measure that gives them 70% of it. The home-owners should get 70% and business and the utilities should get 30%

ARBITER: What is your philosophy? What do you think is the federal government's duty and right? How far do you think the federal government should reach into people's lives?

Truby: It depends on the area. People seem to think that the citizen downtown may be the only freedom of movement that citizen has. That meal that comes to their homes is delaying the time when they will have to go to a nursing home. Is a vote against Meals on Wheels and basic transportation for senior citizens, is that a vote for freedom? We have one miner killed a day in this country. Is a vote against mine safety a vote against freedom? What about minimum wage? Is that an enrichment on your freedom? If you want to hire people for the least amount possible then it restricts your freedom. For me, I came from a family of six kids and I was the first to go to college. We were a desperately poor family and I don't mean just without funds and without things; we were pretty much without hope. Three of my sisters had to quit school before high-school. There just wasn't enough money to clothe the family to go to school. I had freedom because of the minimum

Truby: I prefer to see that money go through student loans

ARBITER: Doesn't that take a certain amount of freedom away from the consumer, the student?

Truby: This is not aid to the student; it's aid to the parent and sometimes the student needs that money to enroll.

ARBITER: You think its an either/or situation then. Does there have to be loans or tax credit?

Truby: I did support tuition tax credit for higher education. I did not support the bill because it also covered public education and I did not think there was enough protection from social and economic discrimination in the bill. Here we get back to the question of opportunity. There are affirmative steps that you have to take. We encourage Mexican labor to come to this...

With a six-year vote record in Congress, one of the most conservative votes recorded in Congress, he's trying to parrot my words.

SYMMS: He won't vote against me on national defense. He's the sort of congressman that believes in the politician's role in national defense, and I think he's overselling his role.

ARBITER: More and more economists are finding out or deciding that the real cause of inflation is monetary policy.

SYMMS: Sure, volumetric expansion of the money supply.

ARBITER: Well, do you think that Carter and the rest of the administration realize the cause of inflation and are just avoiding the issue for political reasons, or do you think that they just don't know?

SYMMS: I don't know. It's hard for me to say. Some of them know. Blumenhall can't believe in the populist tax policy that he calls for, so he's trying to parrot my words.

SYMMS: I'll always vote against the school lunch program. All you have to do is go out to a high school or junior high school and see how the system operates. There is no reason to have the federal government run school lunches in Boise, Idaho. People can run their own lunch programs out here. I'm not against school lunches. I did vote for the Older Americans Act. Originally they had a program in the act that I just thought was too much. I'm not against the senior citizens' centers, they do a lot of good. The government investment isn't as much as the personal contributions put in. In order to get people to do good work, they've got to give them a professional lead. The first time I did vote against it, it had an educational deal for people over 65 that actually gave scholarships; they could get into medical school and graduate studies and have the federal tax payer pay for it. I think that they carry these things too far. Maybe for a half a billion dollars it was a good program but for four billion it was too much.

ARBITER: What can you say, as a legislator, to do end inflation?

SYMMS: There is something else we should remember. If the issues of defense or defense is inextricably intertwined with the issues of taxation and inflation. If we let the GNP expand, the cost of defense as a proportion of the national income will not have been in defense spending. It's gone down from 55% in 1965 to 23% of total federal government expenditures in 1976, so in a 23 year period it has gone down every year in proportion to total federal spending. If you won't build the B-1 bomber or the nuclear missile carrier, it indicates to the rest of the world that they don't have to put any money into defense spending. We didn't start the arms race, the Russians did, but we want to finish it. If we show the commitment that we will defend this country at any cost, at any risk, Russia won't blackmail us at every turn and that's the way that we can stay out of war. People criticize the big carrier by saying that in the event of a nuclear shoot out, the big carriers won't last out the first week. Well, if they last out the first launch, they may have fulfilled their purpose.

ARBITER: Do you have to say that you're against the 13th Amendment, which would give everyone the right to vote for the Older Americans Act?

SYMMS: Out of the last 16 trips to Washington, I've gone coach 12 times. But I don't say that I'll never go first class again: when flights are full, you take what you can get.

ARBITER: How do you justify your support for cigarette restrictions on sugar and beef?

SYMMS: My philosophy is that for free trade but Americans are being taxed by $100 to 150 billion dollars in excise taxes on production by regulation from Washington. This is a competition with foreign producers that they don't have to put up with. I'm against sugar and EPA which affects all of the farmers costs from tractors on down. It gets kind of complicated. In the case of this last bill that went down last week, the sugar producers themselves didn't want it. Why vote for an interventionist law that the growers themselves don't want? Leonard Reed, Harper, and Friedman all say just buy more inexpensive sugar, and I think that's a good program. But the fact is that I do want to see someone make new shirts.

ARBITER: You admit that your support is political?

SYMMS: Sure, I don't want to be understood any better than it is by the constituency without regard. You can't have a society that doesn't have a real estate and all new wealth comes from the land or the banks. I don't think unless someone makes new shirts.

SYMMS: I had heard that you buy more inexpensive sugar, but you run simply to stay in office.

SYMMS: I think that you find that pre-free-enterprise candidates run on the wrong thing. The labor unions do play pretty roughly because they try to help a lot of these people, no matter how laudable their goals are, are simply trying to come in and raise the minimum wage or wages. I'm against the minimum wage law in so far people can vote people at a lower rate to work and earn more. Most all the leading black economists will tell you that the minimum wage law is hurting the blacks and the uneducated and the unskilled workers who are not able to get on-the-job training, but that's very hard to say and to say what's best by organized labor. If the minimum wage goes up 5%, the unions want 5% increases. But if you are making $10 an hour, that's 50 cents while the minimum wage worker gets 10 cents an hour, so the gap is getting bigger between the skilled and the unskilled. I'm arguing a humanitarian position that's often misunderstood, that's all.

IRAN: Myths and Fatalities

(Despite the rising toll of civilian demonstrators in Iran, President Carter praised the Shah in his Oct. 10 press conference for making progress toward liberalization and recognition of human rights. "The Shah is a symbol of our country to have a good relationship with a strong and independent Iran is crucial," he said. Two days later, Iranian troops again fired into a crowd of demonstrators as tens of thousands of middle-class professionals went on striker. Professor Ernest Abrah- amian, associate professor of his- tory at Berkeley College of the City University of New York, explores the contradictory myths and realities in his book "The Shah of Iran: His Country's "King of Kings" and the Revolution of the 1970's," out last week.

The University Arbiter: May 25, 1978 - 5

The Personal Touch

(PNS) - Three million Iranians - ranging from modern, enlightened to U.S.-trained engineers - demonstrate against the Shah of Iran, their country's "king of kings" and reputedly the Mid- east's most popular ruler. In downtown Tehran, the shah's troops - until now considered a bulwark against communism and terrorism - fire American-made rifles into a crowd of 2,000 unarmed demonstrators staging a peaceful sit-down strike. A European eyewitness says the scene reminds him of a firing squad. The British Broadcasting Corp. estimates that in 46 minutes the shah's troops have killed 475 of their own countrymen. What is happening in Iran, until recently considered, along with Israel, America's most stable ally in the Middle East? The size and intensity of the disturbances have shaken the shah. They also should have shaken a quarter-century of American myths about the oil-rich Asian nation and its repressive royal autocracy.

Since 1953 when the CIA helped overthrow the constitutionally elected Iranian government led by Mohammad Mosaddeq, American diplomats and officials have portrayed the Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi as a "popular reformer" distributing land to the poor, eradicating "feudal inequality" among his subjects, performing "economic miracles" with Iran's oil revenues and creating "an island of stability amid Middle East chaos." Thus a thread of perplexity ran through the initial reactions in the American and Western press to the current crisis in Iran. How could such an enlightened ruler find himself in so much trouble with his own people? The reason is that Americans have consistently ignored facts about the shah and Iran that are all too evident to Iranians themselves. After 25 years of the shah's White Revolution and billions of dollars in oil revenues, three out of five rural families are homeless and the cities are overcrowded. Most of the old royal families are hardly landlords or nearly landless. Millions of agricultural workers have been uprooted, forced into the cities in search of work. U.S. newspapers have reported the Shah's comments about education for years; they have paid far less attention to the fact that 80 percent of the adult population remains illiterate. In recent years, while the myths of the benevolent shah and the country's social progress gained wide acceptance, the situation has grown even worse for many Iran- ians. Much was reported on the oil boom, the emancipation of women and the shah's admiration for the Western democracies. The squatted, poverty-stricken shanty towns surrounding Tehran and Iran's other major cities were largely ignored. Demonstrations by Iranians, mostly students, living in the United States against SAVAK, the shah's secret police, were believed to represent only the discontent of a small group of expatriate dissidents. In fact, the shah was constructing a totalitarian regime that controlled all newspapers, unions and professional associations - a police state with one of the world's highest proportions of political prisoners, deaths under torture and military executions. As the Annual Report of Amnesty Inter- national noted more than three years ago, "The Shah of Iran retains his benemient image despite the highest rate of death penalties in the world, no valid system of civilian courts and a history of torture beyond belief." Iran's growing troubles dispelled one myth that the shah is a beloved and revered ruler. But the crisis already has engendered another myth: that the shah is in deep trouble with his own people not because of the mistakes he has made and the violations of human rights he has sanctioned, but because he has been too good, too well-intentioned and too progressive for the "backward-looking" masses he has tried so hard to...

Music Dept. might just completely fall to the ground. The examples stop here, but the list goes on. EVERY DEPARTMENT IN THE UNIVERSITY HAS BEEN TOLD TO SUBMIT RECOMMENDATIONS ON HOW TO AFFECT THEIR OWN DESTRUCTION, destruction in the form of total annihilation, loss of accreditation, loss of programs, or imposition of discriminatory student fees.

At the very best, this whole exercise is a make-work project. A huge amount of time and energy is being and will continue to be spent in putting together the recommendations. If make-work projects are needed to fill time at BSU an absurd proposition — non-destructive projects surely can be found: funding day care centers, increasing the number of linguistic courses offered, adequately heating and cooling the UA building, or filling the library. At the very worst, every recommended cut will be made, leaving BSU with a set of buildings, some of them still being built, one of them not even under construction, and virtually no academic program to give them life.

Why, in the name of God, did Boise State's administrators posit a suicidal exercise? Why are the faculty and administration now preparing recommendations, an activity that would do justice to a learning disability trekking to the sea to die with the rest of his fellows. If, as has been said by top administrators, this exercise will prove that no cuts can be made at BSU, why does not every report state just that? Why do not the faculty, the administrators, and the top level executives firmly and simply report to each other and to the State Board of Education that circumstances can be 15% cut sustained, nor can a 10% cut, nor a 5% cut, but here is ample justification for 100% or 110% of the '79-'80 budget.

At 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget. at 110% of the '79-'80 budget.

To make a report that contains any other cuts, however strong the accompanying recommendation to no-cut might be, shows lack of responsibility toward the supossed commitment for high quality education at BSU and a total disrespect for the trust placed in the hands of the administration even by the students who paid their fees on the promise of obtaining that kind of education.

Dear Students,

I who have classes in the old Science Building may have noticed some changes taking place. Two new elevators are being installed. One of the elevators which is presently a freight elevator is being renovated to accommodate handicapped students. If any one has seen the present condition of the elevator I'm sure they would conclude that it is desirable. Handicapped people can not, in most cases, reach the button to open the doors. Once the main door is open there is a secondary set of doors. The distance of the elevator is adequate for movement of strength to open. Such an elevator makes our handicapped students dependent on others to assist them and I have seen occasions when handicapped students had to wait by the elevator for someone to help them. Both the renovated elevator and the new elevator will alleviate this problem.

Many students are saying we realize the need for elevators, but why two? I do not have a real answer to that question. It appears that one elevator will meet code requirements. I have heard students say let's put in a second elevator for that same cost and was given the approval to do so. Money not used for the elevators would probably go back to the state. Another question is, what of the space taken by the new elevator? As of yet, nothing concrete has been established for replacement of space. Those who will be affected by the elevator are the Geology Geophysics Department, Part of the Geology Department library-office room will be taken as well as a computer terminal room. Re-allocation of space in the old science building will hopefully meet the space needs.

Since the new elevators are under construction and contracts have been signed, its construction seems inevitable.

Some students had concerns that the elevator system would not be installed in the elevators. Architects have assured me that they are in the plans. The system would keep the elevators operating during a power failure.

We also would like to commend Rob Perez and the ASBSU administration in their commitment and efforts for the future of day care at BSU, and in their request of all BSU organizations to voluntarily reduce their respective budgets in order to save the Child's Future Day Care Center.

Get Out and Vote

Editor, The Arbiter:

This letter is particularly addressed to Chuck Bufe, reads your column with gusto. I admire your wit, and agree with most of your opinions. However, I would like to tell you and the other students of BSU why I feel that voting is very important.

Participating in politics as I have been going through life - it has seemed to me that the Democrats and Republicans are different, ideologically. The Democrats seem to be more liberal and more concerned about the environment and humanitarian issues. The Republicans seem to be more concerned with furthering growth, and increasing the profits for the interests of business.

Perez' Stance Defended

Editor, The Arbiter:

I have been surprised and somewhat amazed to discover that during the campus discussions surrounding the pavilion issue, no one made the effort to gain insight for the purpose. On several occasions I have involved with the project as Interim President, eager to discover that some individuals, without complete knowledge of relevancy, have claimed that the project cannot proceed. If someone, without making an effort to solicit information from the one person who is able to provide factual data.

From my point of view, it is important to share with readers of the Arbiter the consistent stand taken by Rob Perez on matters related to the pavilion from the time he took office as President of the Associated Student Body to the time Dr. John Keiser assumed the presidency of the University (August, 1978).

Immediately following student body elections (March, 1978), Rob Perez met with the representatives of the members of the pavilion to discuss the status of the pavilion and to voice their concerns. He stated that he would not support the pavilion unless the following changes were made:

1) Student fee increase would have to be less than 50.
2) The cost estimate of the structure be reduced without deleting the array of functions stuydants insisted the facility should accommodate.
3) Relocation of the tennis courts an issue which would have to be avoided with additional costs.
4) The structure would be fully equipped and ready for immediate use.
5) The pavilion would not be in competition with the other arts and humanities buildings. That, indeed, the Arts and Humanities building would be the University's No. 1 priority in the budget to the State Board of Education.

The University must develop a realistic plan for maintaining and operating the pavilion once in use without increasing the cost to students.

Of course this is a generality; there are people on both sides who have many varieties of interests. However, I would like to see it be in the future.

About a year ago, Idaho Power donated plans to the University. I read have many varieties of interests. However, I would like to see it be in the future.

The request for a student fee for the operation of the pavilion would be submitted to the State Board of Education prior to the October meeting. Such a delay on the part of the University would allow new students as well as the existing students to be involved on the status of the pavilion, and would provide an opportunity for all interested students to participate.

The Monday following graduation (May, 1978), Rob Perez met with representatives from the Board of Directors of the Bronco Scholarship Association and presented the conditions which would have to be met by the University before they would consider supporting the project.

On the June 1978 meeting of the State Board of Education, Rob Perez firmly stated the conditions which he would have to be met prior to his support of the project. He outlined these demands to the State Board and stated that he would accept no compromise.

Once President Keiser assumed the presidency, Rob Perez presented the conditions which he would have to be met before his support for the pavilion would be forth-

As a result of Rob's insistence that the pavilion would have to be supported by a student fee increase reduced by 20%, the cost of the structure reduced by 43%, and a commitment that the student courts and baseball diamond would be relocated without any additional cost to students, the conditions outlined by the President that the facility would be fully equipped and ready for immediate use were adopted. The integrity of the Arts and Humanities building has been protected, a plan for adequately maintaining and operating the pavilion without cost to students has been adopted, (5) a plan to use the Board of Education action until October was realized.

Perhaps, from the point of view of some, these conditions are a debatable topic. From my point of view, Rob exhibited strength of great mind in not waiving a set of conditions which he could only support the pavilion project. Rob demonstrated his ability to have survived the pressures without yielding.

Vote Urged

Editor, The Arbiter:

From the founding fathers of our nation, to the present day, we as citizens have had problems with taxes. The 1% is a major concern facing us, effecting all voters. When we go to the polls and view the issues on the vote, I would urge you to use your education to make an intelligent choice.

We, as students, must take the lead and use our power in making our government. On November 7th, you will have the opportunity to help decide who will run our local, state and federal government. There is no excuse, no one, releasing you from learning about the candidate, where they stand on the issues, and voting for those who will represent you the best. I am just one of each of your eligible vote to do just that; vote.

The University Arbiter - Wednesday, October 25, 1978 - 7
the long run as far as look at the other sources first. Sixty percent of the One Percent our state greater dividends; or ARBITER: other utilities obviously have an big Incorm:praducing pr~pertles" commodity that they're selling, plants as they can. given that their unfortu~ate. Wefe an eXp?rtln9 the benefit from the reduced rates are allowing, as a legitimate operating mant. That being so, do you think timber, It sour mmlng ... w.,at buying it. and (those advertisements promoting coal- congressman, I could not get on a plane in Boise and be wined and taxpayers' expence, get off that plane and vote against school lunches for kids. i couldn't do that. i couldn't take political brochures that (Symms) laughing- it's proper that the PUC is happens if we have a decrease in ers outside of the State of Idaho.

ARBITER: Idaho Power and the other utilities obviously have an incentive to build as many power plants as they can, given that their rates are based on capital invest- ment. That being so, do you think it's proper that the PUC is allowing, as a legitimate operating expense, Idaho Power's running of advertisements promoting coal-fired plants?

EVANS: No, i have great reservations. It's the promotional end of the business, and it's very difficult to control that. It goes too far at times . . . it's a very serious problem with the Public Utilities Commission in controlling that aspect of it (operation of the utilities). I'd like to see them discontinue that . . . they're trying to sell a coal-fired plant, and nothing else, through a lot of those advertisements; it's basically wrong, it shouldn't be a tax deduction.

ARBITER: What effects would passage of the One Percent Initiative have on school funding?

EVANS: Sixty-five percent of the cost of public school education comes from the State of Idaho. I'm suggesting that we should continually move in the direction of increased state support for our public education system, regardless of whether the One Percent passes or not. That's been a goal of mine over a period of years. Hopefully, we can reach in the direction of seventy-five percent (state) funding for our educational system. Now when we start talking in terms of the effects of the One Percent Initiative on our public school system, on higher education, it's going to have a very dramatic effect. It would cost $114 million of property tax programs for local government; and local government, including our school districts, cannot absorb $141 mil- lion of losses without creating substantial problems for their essential programs: that's fire protection and police protection plus our public school systems. if the One Percent passes, we're going to have to fund a greater portion of public school costs from the state level. With the limited resources we have, without raising income taxes or sales taxes, or some other tax to offset it, we're going to have some severe difficulties. People are of the opinion that Idaho has great surpluses, that there are programs out there with which we can just eliminate right and left, that we can make great savings. That isn't the case in Idaho. We stopped the growth of state government two years ago . . . We're talking in terms of everybody having to tighten their belts, of having to reexamine their programs . . . so that we can make some savings. I think that's what people are really talking about; (they) don't want to cut back on opportunities for our children for higher education or vocational education; they want to eliminate waste in government.

ARBITER: Idaho Power's tax-relief proposal is that we either can increase their dividends; or they can reduce the price of the commodity that they're selling. And when they do that, who gets the benefit from the reduced price? It's the people who are buying it, and (those are) consum- ers outside of the State of Idaho.

Truly: That's the general feeling. The real difference between Symms and I is the question of where the money is going to be cut, that's all. Congressman Symms is saying we'll send up in Idaho to the Pentagon for every dollar that we're spending on the highway. Why do we have more generals now than we had in World War II? Why do we have 167 chauffeur driven limousines for the Pentagon in Washington DC? Why do we need 25 billion for a B1 bomber when even our best military minds say that the day of the manned bomber is over? Why is congress the fastest growing bureaucracy? That's the place that I would cut. Congressman Symms held one of the highest travel budgets in the Northwest, partially because his property taxes for those big indus- tries? They can do one of two things: they either can increase their dividends and pay their stockholders who are outside of our state greater dividends; or they reduce the price of the commodity that they're selling. And when they do that, who gets the benefit from the reduced price? It's the people who are buying it, and (those are) consum- ers outside of the State of Idaho.

Reduce Spending & Cut Taxes!

Bernie Rakozy

Representative Distict 15 Republican

This is the first time Bernie Rakozy has run for an elective office. What prompted him to do it? "I have been watching, with in- creasing frustration as our taxes spiral upward, fueled by excessive spending and unnecessary government programs. We must reduce unnecessary spending, ap- portion state funds on a more businesslike basis. Instead of trying to balance the books, we need to reduce the tax load we're paying."

Vote November 7th

Rakozy for Representative Committee, Ellis G. Gamber and Jim Keady Committee, T. J. Johnson, Treasurer.

"Cross-town" Rivalry?

by Bob Rosenthal
BSU Sports Information Director

The Boise State-Idaho football rivalry is actually a relatively young one, beginning in 1971. Prior to that, Boise State Jr. College had played the Idaho freshmen on several occasions.

The Broncos hold a 4-2-1 series lead over the Vandals, but in this short period of time, the rivalry has become intense and at the least, very interesting. It's interesting because the visiting team has fared better than the home team over the past seven years, holding a 4-2-1 edge. However, the Broncos are a relatively new program and the Vandals have a much longer history.

Looking into the more distant future, it is conceivable that there could be a masters program developed in writing which would be different than a typical Masters of Arts degree. He also believes that in conjunction with the University of Idaho, Boise State will have to be responsive to the continuing education needs for the legal profession.

The Boise State-Idaho football rivalry is one of the most intense in the state, with both teams vying for the coveted Potato Bowl trophy. It's interesting because the visiting team has fared better than the home team, but the trend was altered in 1974 when the Broncos won 53-29 in the season's last home game.

In 1975, Boise won the game in Boise, 22-21 on a last-game two-point conversion. Then in 1973, for the third straight year, the visitors won as Boise State downsed the Vandals, 47-24 to open the season.

The trend was altered in 1974 when the Broncos won 53-29 in the season's last home game in Boise.

The Broncos opened up the 1976 season at home against the Vandals and dropped a 16-9 decision, giving the visiting team the win once again.

Last season, BSU closed out the football campaign with a 42-14 win in Moscow, giving the visiting team, BSU a 4-2-1 edge in the series.

Boise State: New Dimensions In Education

"The exciting thing is that our overall success rate is 90%. But still, more exciting is the fact that there are more jobs in the Boise Area than can be filled by our graduating students here at Boise State University."

Glen Linder, Assistant Director of Vocational Education at Boise State University said that "we are continually looking at industry needs and as far as total projection, we are trying to remain flexible enough to permit students to train for the many new and different industries that are coming into the area."

Vocational Education at Boise State University is headed in a new and exciting direction; gone are the days when only welding and auto mechanics courses were offered. In fact, several new courses are being considered, including Forecultural, Clean Air and Water, and Waste Water.

To meet the needs of the area, Boise State University is considering establishing a satellite campus in the Nampa/Caldwell area. To determine what might be offered there, the Department of Employment has begun a study to find out what future industries' needs will be. When this becomes a reality, facilities will probably have to be built.

It is also interesting to know that when 10 or more students are interested in enrolling in certain subjects, Vo-Tech will make every effort to offer the course. Some of the courses that have been added since Linder came to Boise State are food service, small engine repair, and child care.

Says Linder, "The success of the programs are due to three things: (1) the need is here; because Boise is a population center of the state of Idaho, and (2) it is the dedication of the people, from the legislature on down, that is helping vocational education grow to meet these needs."

If you are interested in enrolling in one of the special courses offered by Vocational Education at Boise State University, call Mr. Linder. He and his staff will be more than happy to talk with you about your future. His phone number is 385-1259.

Though Vocational Education is important to some students, equally as important is academics. "I see the next ten years for this institution as ones of very significant maturation," according to BSU Executive Vice-President, Dr. Richard Bullington.

As Bullington states, "looking at the not too distant future, it is conceivable that there could be a masters program developed in writing which would be different than a typical Masters of Arts degree." He also believes that a program in counseling and guidance is needed since that is as much a part of industry as it is for the public schools.

These programs are in keeping with the president's wishes that we educate a lifetime person, and that our graduate and undergraduate programs be characterized by literature.

Looking into the more distant future, it is possible that, in conjunction with the University of Idaho, certain facets of engineering will be offered at Boise State. Bullington believes that it is inevitable that in order to more expediently meet the needs of Morrison-Knudson and Hewlett-Packard, the university is going to have to respond and offer some graduate and undergraduate programs in Engineering. He also believes that in conjunction with the University of Idaho, Boise State will have to be responsive to the continuing education needs for the legal profession.

Bullington continued, "I think that it's very important now that the university committees be responsible for the curriculum. Last year the university curriculum committee thought it would be a worthwhile idea to look at the core program at the university and that as an outgrowth of this there would be an ad-hoc committee which will analyze the present core curriculum and determine if it's doing the best job for the general education of students at Boise State. Perhaps the degree to which the Boise State student is educated is in relationship to the quality of the general education experience. That's why I think its very important that there be an example of our present core."

The next ten years of this institution will be one of growth, which will determine the destiny of the Boise State.
Homecoming For Outstanding Alumni

by Mark McDonagh

The homecoming theme this year is Boise State—Dimensions of Excellence. It’s hoped that this concept will allow high quality academic and athletic programs at the university. The school of Business has made plans to show its excellence by having several alumni return to Boise State and give guest lectures in different classes.

“We have asked some of our outstanding alumni to come back to the university and share their experiences with specific classes,” Dean Thomas Stitzel said. “Each year we have professionals share their real world experiences with students in the classroom. The difference this year is that we have asked some of our accomplished alumni to share their experience during the homecoming week.”

“The University is fairly young,” he continued, “but even so, we have a number of graduates who have risen to positions with considerable and significant experience.” Among the alumni that will speak to business classes are Bob Toll, Cathy Carter, and Dick Teutsch. Toll is a controller at the State Tax Commission and will speak on state revenue and tax relief. Carter is a former teacher at St. Mary’s school and has recently assumed an overseas teaching position. Her topic will be the role of a new teacher. Teutsch is a manager for Deloitte Haskins and Sells and will speak on internal control. Each of the five departments in the School of Business will have a guest alumnus speak.

Dean Stitzel said, “Homecoming is just that. It’s having graduates come back to the university and share their experience. We are proud of what these people have done and having them speak in the classroom about the business world adds a new dimension to teaching.”

The Residence Hall Association, with the assistance of Boy Scout Troop #190, will inflate thousands of helium balloons on Saturday, November 4th, to be passed out at the gate for the game. THE BALLOONS SHOULD BE RELEASED AT KICKOFF!!!

To add a new dimension to the balloon release, each helium-filled balloon will contain a return-to-sender postcard. The finder of the balloon and postcard is asked to please return the postcard with their name, address, and the location where the balloon was found.

Helium balloons from similar activities around the nation have successfully completed even Trans-Atlantic crossings. Postcards have been returned from as far away as London, England! We hope that our balloons have such stamina!

Essence of Homecoming

The very essence of the word “homecoming” brings back to me the delicious sweet-sour savor of my former Homecoming Week experiences, as pungent and mixed as the flavor of the seasonal cider. Although I suppose there is something of the universal appeal of any college homecoming, I remember homecoming dances and parties at the small private college I attend back in Cleveland as being quite the event of the fall season.

Always each fraternity had its separate post-game function, usually at a rented party center, complete with live band, and always seemed to be a general need to outdo one another among organization. Additionally, it was the ultimate feeling of social rejection to be one of those not asked or unable to find a date. Although there were those who curtly compiled lists of “possibili- ties,” choosing the best offer at the last minute, there were also those who shame- facely muttered something about a “big Bio test Monday” and retreated into the depths of the study lounge or the local cafe. Being asked by the Right Person to the Right Dance was, if not everything, at least the center of our social concerns.

Last week, I asked a friend about the Homecoming Week festivities at BSU and was told that the entire enterprise was viewed as “a nice time, but no really big thing.” Is big thing? But what about my former memories? Where would all the suspense be, the endless decisions about what to wear, where to go and With Whom? Damn it, what about my carefully preserved and preserved evening dress, hauled from Ohio? Maybe I should have reserved the space for flannel shirts.

Then, as I reflected a little further, a saner perspective began to dawn on me: Who Cared? Why was I worried about a silly, superficial social contest when that is the very thing I left home to escape? So What if there isn’t a breakneck show of social onemanship this Homecoming Weekend? Was I really missing anything? Wasn’t it more important to be happy and comfortable with the people around me? I will probably attend Homecoming festivities of one sort or another, and no, they probably won’t be like the ones I have known. But more importantly, I will be happy, pleased with the company, and at ease to be myself. And, after all, isn’t that the general idea behind a celebration? I think that this year I will be enjoying a lot, more than a college homecoming; I will be celebrating a newly chosen lifestyle of freedom and simplicity.

The contest is sponsored by the ASBSU activity schedule this year as an event referred to as the ‘Great American Talent Show’ undeals. Mr. Bronco has gone the way of the ice cream social and the sewing bee. He has been retired to the traditions of yesterday. This year there will be no Mr. Bronco for homecoming. He was been replaced by the ASBSU homecoming project for 1978, the Mr. Ugly contest.

The Mr. Ugly contest is a gag that the ASB hopes will raise money for the American Cancer Society and the BSU day-care center. “We hope to continue the contributions to the Cancer Society that we started last year,” said Steve Botimer, ASB vice president. “We also promised the day-care center enough money to oil a dirt alley behind their building.”

Anyone can be nominated for the Mr. Ugly contest by paying a nomination fee of $5.00 at the ASB offices, the SUB information booth, or Casey’s Beer Depot. After the nomination fee is paid, it costs only a penny a vote to support your favorite candidate. Votes will be taken at all three locations and will be counted on November 3.

There will be two winners in the Mr. Ugly contest: a student and a non student. The contest has been designed this way to create outside as well as student involvement in the project.

Nomination and voting will run from Oct. 27 - Nov. 3. The winners will be announced at the homecoming dance on Nov. 3 at the Rodeway Inn.
Residence Halls Association and BSU Alumni Association will put up Homecoming Banners on University Drive.

Lyle Smith Sports Interview

by Marianne Flagg

What are your long and short-term goals for the development of the mens' program? Well, I would have to say, the mens' intercollegiate athletics short-term goals would be to win the Big Sky All-Sports trophy. Our long range goal would be to continue to develop our program to meet the needs and interests of the university community.

How long have you been at BSU? This is my thirty-third year.

How long do you think you're going to stay on? Getting tired of being an athletic director? Well, No. You don't get tired of it. It's the kind of work that's a challenge. It's been mightily interesting being here through the development of the school. But I guess maybe you wear out.

Have you given any thought to what you would like BSU to do after you leave—in the way of athletics? How would you like to see it continue? Well, I think that we're on pretty sound footing now, whether our enrollment will enhance the facilities or not, we would leave the present competition. I don't foresee that in the immediate future. I might happen.

Would the 1% initiative affect your athletic program? Well, the 1% initiative will have very little affect on intercollegiate athletics, in that the only appropriated monies that go into, intercollegiate sports are the salaries. So the operation of the program does not depend on the 1% initiative. It's not the great concern that it might be.

How will the pavilion affect the program? Do you see expansion in the mens' program because of that? I don't see any particular expansion in intercollegiate athletics other than probably our crowds at basketball. The other sports that we have, wrestling for example, would probably still be held in our matches in the old gym. Just would not need that size. I think the pavilion will provide an opportunity to bring in a little better-known basketball teams. It will provide an opportunity for an NCAA regional play-off, which I think that the basketball fans would enjoy. I can see the pavilion as being more enhancing of the recreational opportunities for more of our students and the university community. I don't mean to imply that it won't be a great boon to our intercollegiate program, but the new Education building and the new Science building will too, just part of the whole picture.

Who determines how much money is appropriated to each sport? Do you decide that? Yes, I decide that.

The reason I ask, is in recent years the basketball and baseball teams have done considerably poorly, really, in comparison with the football team. Is that due in part to funding? Do you see any other reason for that? Well, I don't think it's a matter of funding. Basketball has been funded to the extent that we are allowed by the NCAA rules and regulations. That is, we've held the number of grants and aids that the NCAA allows. Our baseball funding is somewhat under NCAA limitations, but still comparable to the people we compete against. In determining the amount of funding, we take into consideration the number of participants in a sport as one criteria, besides the spectator potential. I think we do realize that from a general student body standpoint, that providing them spectator entertainment is important. I don't know of any activity on our campus that will draw as many people into one event as an athletic contest will. We feel an obligation, certainly, to our full-time students.

What will Title 9 do to the mens' program? Well, we don't know just what Title will do. Next month, in fact, there supposedly will be a meeting in either Dallas, Texas or Chicago to interpret Title 9. HEW is going to interpret what they mean by the rules and regulations. I don't anticipate any great change in our program. I think there's no question but that we need to support the women's intercollegiate athletics more than we have in the past. But hopefully, here in our institution at least, we can build slow and solid from day to day and have an excellent program that the women students at Boise State University can participate in...that we can all take pride in. In light of the fact that the Bronco dreams of a Big Sky title are dashed, do you think the victory over San Jose State will spur the players on to finish the season well? Well, certainly they put on an excellent performance, and I would hope so. I think it pointed out one thing to me: I was feeling bad about the whole thing, and then I stopped to realize that, hey, this Big Sky conference is pretty tough. They've got good coaches, good athletes, and they've got an enthusiastic student body. You just better figure that we're in a real tough conference, and every time you go to the post, you better be ready to play.
If you happen to be a Bronco fan, and get the strange feeling that you're living in Pittsburgh, don't worry, you're not alone. 18,000 other people, who made their way into a chilly, windy Bronco Stadium Saturday night, probably thought that they too were living in the city that made DEE-FENCE famous. The Boise State offense, ravaged by injuries, penalties, and disqualification, gave way to the Bronco defense, which could only be described as fantastic, which preserved a 14-13 win over Weber State last Saturday night.

Boise State gained only 232 yards total offense compared to Weber State's 274 yards, the second time in two weeks that BSU has been outgained. The ball was in the air many times Saturday, not from passing however, but from punts, 19 of them to be exact. Hogan was 7 of 14 passing for only 74 yards.

Minter, who now gained 1031 yards on the season, "The Boise State offense and Villano, and his compadres. Macauley, described by Coach Criner as "unbelievable," did everything but sell programs and operate the scoreboard from his linebacker position. Bob was credited with 22 tackles, two deflected passes, two hurried passes, a fumble recovery, and one interception. He also led the goal-line stand that stopped Weber State on three attempts to score from the six-inch line, late in the fourth quarter, and deflected the pass from Bledsoe on WSC's two-point conversion attempt - the failure providing the margin of victory for the Broncos. Not that Macauley stopped the Wildcats all by himself; he had plenty of help from the likes of Beamon, Cabrera, Beaton, Tufono, and Freeman, Chris Bell, Curt Chandler, and Rick Woods, along with veterans Nash, Balian, and Layne Osborne, did a good job in containing Weber State's air attack. A hurting Sam Miller came in and made his presence known in the BSU secondary.

Coach Criner, who along with the offensive problems was suffering from a bad case of bronchitis, was glad his team won but worried you're not alone. 18,000 other people, who made their way into a chilly, windy Bronco Stadium Saturday night, probably thought that they too were living in the city that made DEE-FENCE famous. The Boise State offense, ravaged by injuries, penalties, and disqualification, gave way to the Bronco defense, which could only be described as fantastic, which preserved a 14-13 win over Weber State last Saturday night.

With Wildcat players literally flying everywhere, Bronco defenders home in on WSC ballcarrier Eric Hill during BSU's 14-13 win.

Boise's air is not a personal concern. Providing public transit is part of the solution.

The other part is up to you.

"A wildcat runningback applies a crushing block to the midsection of BSU Academic All-American, safety Sam Miller."

"Bus Conner, moving into his seventh season as Boise State head basketball coach, has eight letterwinners back from last season's 13-14 squad. Assistant coach Doug Oliver begins his third season with Conner, while second assistant John Vanney joins the Broncos for the 1978-79 campaign."

"The Broncos will look quite a bit different from the teams of the past three or four years. Gone is high-scoring guard Steve Conner and talented starters Trent Johnson and Danny Jones. However, Conner is confident his "new look" team will be as effective as past Boise State teams."

"Actually we'll have a fairly experienced team this season, even though many of these kids have not played together," Conner said. "We'll be starting mostly juniors and seniors and our immediate job will be to blend the individual talents together. We will go inside more than we did last season and look for the high percentage shot because we have good height on the front line," he said.

"Junior figure to be top candidates for the forward positions while a senior and a sophomore will fight it out for the starting center job.

"Juniors John Anderson (6-9), John Mayfield (6-9) and Mike Mundie (6-6) are all strong candidates at forward. Anderson has played at Santa Barbara JC while Mundie played at Idaho College in Salt Lake City. Mayfield has played for BSU and the pass the post position. McKenna begins his fourth season in the Boise State basketball program. He earned the starting center job last season but was sidelined for seven weeks with a broken wrist suffered early in the season against Northern Colorado. His injury cost the season into a starting role, and the inexperienced freshman handled the job very well. Now as an experienced sophomore, he'll be a tough man to compete against.

"Two senior guards return for the Broncos this season in Mike Williams (6-5) and Carl Powell (5-10). Both have starting experience and are good at guarding and shooting guards. A big addition to the team is 6-5 junior guard Tom Lloy from Salt Lake City. Lloy gives the Broncos a much needed big guard who can shoot and run well. Other candidates at the guard include Junior Tony Hodges (6-5), Brent Duncan (5-10) and Reddog Bates (6-3)."

"The Broncos play 14 home games this season, including their two appearances in the Boise State Invitational. The team's first open scrimmages will be held following the Boise State-Idaho homescoming football game, Nov. 4. Season tickets at Boise State go on sale Nov. 1 at the BSU Varsity Center. Tickets are $30."

Field Hockey Posts Win

After three weeks of frustration and an 0-6-1 record, the Boise State field hockey team finally experienced the emotional sensations associated with winning. The Bronco's played NNC last Tuesday Oct. 17th, to a 0-0 tie in regulation time. Then in overtime with the help of four penalty stroke goals, BSU's field hockey team captured their first victory of the season.

Later coach Jayne Van Wassenhove would say of the team performance, "We controlled the tempo of the game, and the win helped change the overall morale of our team. The game had by far the best stick work and total team interaction to date. Still we lack the element of intensity, that killer instinct needed when approaching our opponents." So with a victory fresh in hand and an already established home tradition, the newly acquired traditional field hockey kits, the Boise State squad headed south for a weekend encounter with powerful BYU and Northern Colorado. Unfortunately for Northern Colorado BSU's sense of self worth and rapidly developing solidity culminated in a superb demonstration of Bronco potential. For the first time this season, Von Wassenhove's squad penetrated the nets twice on goals by Donna Phelps and Donna West. "We played inspired hockey, an aggressive brand leaned from BYU's Alumni in a practice game before the Northern Colorado contest. Our forward line played exceptional ball, the freshmen are realizing their positions, and those two goals have gotta be a record," said the elated coach.

Boise State's record then stood at 2-6-1 with tough BYU still to contend with the following day. Playing flat after the Northern Colorado contest, the Broncos just didn't manage to tie the Cougars 1-1, scoring a goal with two minutes left in the game.

The Bronco field hockey team now becomes a traveling team for the balance of their fourteen game schedule. The only "close to home" action will be a return game at NNC in Nampa on Halloween at 4 pm.

On Oct. 27 and 28, four team tournament action at the University of Oregon in Eugene is the next competition. The Broncos will meet the Oregon Ducks, Pacific Lutheran University and the Oregon College of Education team. This season to date they have had only one defeat that by UC Berkeley.
Furiously I wished him dead for having sped his noisy chromed machine down my street with his buddy, furiously increasing the distance between us.

Later I saw the body, blanket-covered in the gutter, next to his wrecked machine, shot dead with buckshot by my neighbors. Young blacks on the street corner, old men in useless overalls, and women shivering in blue agree tentatively holding their screens ajar. We commented about the noise, the speed, the safety of our children. We watching the steaming lights paint paths of red across our doors, exclaiming us from death as if we were innates.

The driver of the blackened, blistered pick-up he had exploded into was still in shock being attacked so suddenly. He did not object when a cop turned on a neighbor's hose to wash the blood down the gutter, or when the buddy climbed into the ambulance to wash his way through town. I prayed they found his promised land.

The Exceptional Child

by Bob Goar

The slogan used by the Mental Health Association of Idaho is "Children Who Make a Difference." But just as dynamic is the symbol used for Idaho's Exceptional children. It simply says: "Education for All."

Who are the children who benefit? In essence, they are the children who are mentally retarded and who also suffer from schizophrenia, brain damage, psychoneurosis, psychopathy, and who have reading problems and learning disabilities. The child talented with a high IQ is also classified as a gifted child.

To make aid to these children possible, the State has established an Idaho Child Find program. It is their theory that "many handicaps can be prevented or successfully treated at an early age." All the Child Find Organization asks is that they be notified if anyone knows of a pre-school age or school-age handicapped child who is not receiving the special services they offer.

To fund specially-trained personnel, the State of Idaho provides funds to pay 80% of the cost of special programs. Those specially trained personnel include special education teachers, consulting teachers, visiting teachers for homebound students, communication disorder specialists, social workers, psychologists, special education directors/supervisors, and teacher's aids.

Mrs. Martha Noffsinger, who is a consultant with the State Department of Education, said that "When you have a state dollar that's provided to serve a certain group of children, you generally find a program happening soon after, and that was the case here in Idaho. We have 80% reimbursement of an approved special education teacher and we also provide a rated funding amount to districts that's greater than 8% of the amount they receive for regular children. So you do have an incentive to educate the exceptional children. The resistance to this is still a factor, although it is a reduced factor from what it was in 1973."

Noffsinger said that "every school in Boise, to the best of my knowledge, has special education programs within its buildings, and in slightly over 500 schools within the state, we estimate that 450 of those have some type of program. Bussing may also be involved so that parents can get services for their exceptional children within the districts in which they reside."

New Music; Same Old Spirit

by Bud Humphrey

Swinho, the lead guitarist of Wolfgang, raised a point about what has been called new wave music after their warm-up performance at Snail on the 121 Club last Wednesday. "The new wave is what rock and roll was used to be... recalling the Yardbirds, back in the sixties, the really high energy, the spirit that rock and roll used to be for.

The 121 concert provided an excellent case study. Wolfgang's 45-minute set displayed the spirit and the showmanship of the old Who, The Raiders, The Small Faces, with maybe a touch more professionalism. Plunkett and smart- alecky bassist Randy Rand form a physically and audibly active front. Plunkett belts out the lyrics in an earthy voice, and strokes the Firebird guitar slung down to his hips with such quickness as suggests a Shammar; Rand jumps, gyrates, shouts, claps, and makes faces, while contributing background vocals. DiBacco is one of those rare drummers who will cooperate with the group's style and deliver his rhythm or slide guitar work with the ease of a hot knife working through warm butter. The rhythm section is no less subtle. Undoubtedly, the bass player's effort; he delivers what drumming the group needs to keep on flowing, and builds it no more, straight-ahead rockers. Snail will gyrate, shout, claps, and make a few licks in on the side. It's not surprising that this group, which considers itself "semi-new wave," has earned the unofficial appellation of top group in Hollywood, the heart of operation. Wolfgang will soon embark on a national tour, and may cut an album before long (a single, "Music is My Mistress," is from their recent album which has been pushed hard by a local record label). And, while on and off the air) show Snail's simmering, bone-scaling style more effectively, and not coincidentally these songs look to be headed for AM play. Snail itself is definitely on the up way to a well-earned appreciation, and if you saw their 121 concerts last Wednesday and Thursday, it will come as no shock.

Snail, along with Wolfgang, played two shows last week at the 121 Club.

Elevator

According to Al Hooten, assistant vice-president for financial affairs, the problem began when the University architect left his job in May so the administration had to go outside the university to get estimates for a job. The first architect consulted estimated $60,000 to put a new passenger elevator in and an additional $30,000 to repair the freight elevator. After the various channels of funding and approval for a $50,000 grant, another architect gave a contract offer to build a new passenger elevator and renovate the freight elevator to accommodate passengers for $80,000 total.

Since the funding was already granted, the administration thought it best to go ahead and get the job completed, said Hooten. Basically, the controversy arose because of "bad communication on our part," he added.

Hooten said he couldn't see how the loss of 'T'11' and 'P'7' in the building would be such a problem. He said dust screens would be provided for the terminals on the second floor of the science building to protect the equipment in use during the construction period.

The controversy raging over the ERA always hits a hot button and occasionally infuriating note with me. The only guarantees (sic) ... in the ERA always hits a hot button ... meets the status of women ... by participating in the ERA.

The arguments against the ERA are flimsy by any standards. The most bizarre and pathetically amusing argument against the ERA deals with the toilet issue. There has been, and always will be, a fundamental right of privacy under the law of women under our constitution. The only guarantees (sic) are those of fundamental human rights already guaranteed to men under our constitutional amendments.

El Cetera

If you have a desire to contribute your time to help others, to acquire the experience and talent to get along with a variety of people, to participate in life on a more active, physical and emotionally, and to set a positive example for others to follow, there will be an organization for volunteers for the Boise City Special Olympics Program in the Big Four room in the SUB on October 30, 1978, at 7 p.m.
Pre-registration Soon

Pre-registration for the Spring, 1979 semester will be held November 6-17. All continuing BSU students are eligible, said Susanna Holz, BSU registrar.

Those registering must pick up a demographic information card and a schedule request form, from Registrar’s personnel in the hallway of the administration building prior to seeing an advisor.

Full-time students carrying eight credits or more must meet with an advisor prior to completing a schedule request form. Part-time students are not required to see an advisor, but it is strongly recommended, according to Holz.

All schedule request forms must be returned along with the demographic information card to the Registrar’s Office no later than 5:00 p.m. November 22. Forms received after the deadline cannot be processed.

Students may pick up a copy of their schedule December 6-8 from the Registrar’s Office. Schedules and bills will be sent out December 18 to all students who pre-registered, with payment due in person or by mail no later than January 5.

Open registration for those students who did not pre-register or did not meet the payment deadline is January 16. Drop/add processing and late registration will begin on January 18.

Iran

The shah is now portrayed as a genuine modernizer whose only error has been to create a reactionary backlash by trying to do too much for his people too soon.

The shah’s opposition in fact now includes every political tendency in Iran with the exception of staunch monarchists. It is led by two major groups, both consistently misrepresented in the West.

They are the National Front (dismissed as communists back when the CIA supported the shah against them) and Iran’s Moslem religious authorities (dismissed as feudal reactionaries today, as President Carter takes time off from his human rights crusade to telephone the shah to assure him of America’s total support).

The National Front is headed by Western-educated democrats — intellectuals, lawyers, teachers and professionals. It includes, among others, moderate liberals, secular reformers and democratic socialists. The group’s main demand is the restoration of the constitutional system established in 1906, disregarded by the shah’s family since 1921, when it seized the throne.

The National Front also calls for progressive taxation and the nationalization of large companies. They want to prune the shah’s gigantic military budget, which serves chiefly to undermine repression inside Iran, not defend it from foreign enemies. The group also wants a more balanced foreign policy in which Iran will act more in its own interests and lend as a Middle Eastern deputy sheriff on behalf of the Pentagon. The Shah’s religious opponents have been equally misrepresen- ted. Dismissing them as Islamic reactionaries is a little like accusing liberal Catholic reformers in Latin America of wanting to bring back the Inquisition. Iran’s religious authorities support the National Front’s demands for constitutionalism and a neutralist foreign policy. They also want to establish Islamic social justice. Outside observers frequently forget that, like Christianity, Islam has a strong strain of social egalitarianism. By ruling through a small, rich and largely corrupt elite, the shah has offended the belief in fundamental human equality that many Moslems share.

The reason opposition to the shah is centered in the mosques is that with all secular means of opposition rigorously suppressed, the mosques have been the only non-government forums allowed to function in the country.

While the opposition leaders predominantly come from the clergy and the intelligentsia, the masses of Iranians who have demonstrated against the shah come from three major groups — the salaried middle classes, especially teachers, engineers and white-collar employees and university students; the commercial middle class, particularly shop- keepers, small merchants and self-employed craftsmen; and the urban working class, notably factory workers, day laborers and other low-paid wage earners.

United by the opposition’s rallying cry — “End the Dictatorship” — these three groups each have special social and economic grievances that the shah has ignored.

Over the last five years, the salaried middle classes have been hit by a 200 percent rise in food prices, while rents have tripled. Shopkeepers have been burdened with price controls and been used as a scapgoat for government incompetence, especially the failure to control inflation. The workers have suffered not only from inflation, low wages and rising unemployment, but also from lack of housing, schools and medical facilities, as well as 25 years of broken promises over pensions, unemployment insurance and industrial safety regulations. On Oct 7, tens of thousands of workers — teachers, doctors, bureaucrats, and millmen — went on strike for higher pay.

The shah himself is at a crossroads. He can continue to rule as a military dictator relying on the army and the secret police to maintain the public’s submis- sion. Or he can liberalize — permit opposition parties, professional associations and other large groups to organize, express their views and campaign in free elec-
