Students of Boise State University
Craig and Nichols Clash in Debate
by Ryndy Reed

The race for Idaho's First Congressional seat was brought sharply into focus last Thursday night with the first televised debate in a series that is being co-sponsored by the Idaho Press Club and the Idaho League of Women Voters.

About 65 people attended the debate which was held at the Boise Public Library Auditorium and broadcast live by KAIQ Channel 4 and the PBS affiliate KUID in Moscow, covering nearly all areas of the First Congressional District.

Republican Larry Craig and Democrat Glenn Nichols both appeared to be relaxed and ready-by-action as they responded to the issues and questions that were put before them by a panel of four Idaho journalists.

Each candidate stated his positions, opinions in a straightforward manner, speaking with candor and occasionally tossing barbed one-liners aimed at his opponent.

Larry Craig and Glenn Nichols were at odds on the issue of right-to-work systems - "is not only a deterrent to legislation, which one of them wants to help make military service more lucrative than it is now.

Nichols said that Craig had raised the issue of his own experience in private business himself, contrasting it with Nichols' own experience in the public realm as the former director of the Idaho Department of Employment.

Craig said he has invited the press and his opponent to examine "the sort of rash rhetoric that was not the answer.

Nichols suggested that the policy makers are "the sort of rash rhetoric that was not the answer.

Larry Craig in the past has said thatCraig's position on the issue of national defense, Craig said a strong "vote his conscience" or "vote his convictions" for the group's constitution.

Injuries are an inevitable part of the athlete's life, and can make competition painful or impossible. When such injuries do occur, Ron Pfeiffer comes to the rescue.

Pfeiffer is an instructor and head of the athletic training program at Boise State. He said, "Most injuries are attributed to sprains and concussions." He runs the Emergency Care Unit, a type of EMT.

The athletic department boasts of 20 student Emergency Care trainers two of which are in the nursing program at Boise State. This makes the future of the medical training department look like it will benefit the student.

Regents Drop Stance

(CPS) Surviving the wrath of the Board of Regents is the popular erotic film weekend at Northern Illinois University has been banned, but not beaten. And now it's still expected to go on as scheduled sometime this spring.

Last year's version sparked a rash of outrage from members of the university community. The Board of Regents adopted as its "sentiment" in July a strong position banning the showing of any x-rated films at the Northern Illinois, Illinois State University and Sanganon State campuses, which the board oversees. But there's been doubt that whether "sentiment" would be binding or just an advisory stance.

The uncertainty was cleared when the regents recently voted to make its policy only advisory, leaving the final decisions about campus porn films up to each of the three university presidents.

All the trainers are certified nationally and have a certificate in first aid. In addition, the department provides follow-up care and rehabilitation first aid.

In intercollegiate activities here Pfeiffer has seen numerous head injuries, concussions and cervical neck injuries, as well as spinal injuries and dislocations.

Broken bones are not uncommon and the equipment to care for these is well-developed and ultrasound and electrical machines which send sound vibrations to the muscles and expand and warm the muscles. A Micro-Wave machine is also available for deep heating. All of the treatment is carried out under the supervision of a physician.

The newest piece of equipment is the Orthotron, which is the most sophisticated addition to the Athletic Department. The Orthotron uses a hydraulics system, which runs through a range of motions set at a constant speed to rebuild the muscle structure in the demaged area. All injuries are rehabilitated through machines. Pfeiffer said, "The process is a total care unit from injury to re-participation in sports activities."

Gary Craner is the head of men's athletic training, while Jayne Van Wassenhove handles the sports medicine for women on the field.

Survey Finds "Law Student Glut" is Myth

New York, NY (CPS) - Fears that law students won't be able to find jobs when they graduate are overstated, according to a new survey that found that 56 percent of 1999 law graduates have found employment.

The National Association for Law Placement conducted the survey, of 136 law schools to find out if the "lawyer glut" was for real, and if law schools should therefore cut back on their admissions.

The association discovered that virtually all the schools' graduates found a job in the field within nine months of getting their degrees. Fifty-four percent of those who got jobs are in private practice, 14 percent in government practice, 10 percent in business, 22 percent are clerking for judges, working in public interest law, or stowing in a academy or the military.

The way it worked last week is somewhat different than the way it will work next week. Picking up student tickets and using them to get into the game—that's what we're talking about.

Answering the inevitable stack of complaints over the Boise-Idaho game's lack of seats, a new policy has been worked out to ensure that full-time-paying students have the chance for a seat at BSU's home games.

Here it is: Only one student ticket, and if desired, one guest ticket can be picked up by a student for each game. To pick up a ticket, a student must have their own 1) current activity card and 2) a photo ID. One student cannot use another student's ID to pick up a ticket.

At the gate, the student must present 1) a student ticket and 2) a current activity card. Without the activity card, the student ticket will not be honored.

This policy is effective immediately. During this week before the Fullerton game and at the gate, the required items will be asked for. If the student does not have them, a warning will be given that, beginning with the Weber Game next week, no credentials—no ticket and no admission.

The ticket counter will be open in the Information Office of the SUB as follows:

Monday noon-9 pm

T-Th 8 am-9 pm

Fri 8 am-4 pm

or until the tickets are gone. Additional people will be scheduled to assist in the ticket pick-up during the normal rush times.

Campaign Invades 'Public' Offices

(CPS)–The Reagan campaign has spread into the offices of two Sunbelt universities, and despite questions about the propriety of publicly-funded institutions taking active parts in partisan politics, officials say it will stay in those offices.

San Diego State University President Abner Call, who never seems controversial, has been named to be far removed from controcity chairman of the Reagan-Bush campaign. At San Diego State University, a student government officer allegedly used student facilities to mobilize campus Reagan support—an effort that would violate California law.

Both men denied their actions were wrong.

"I'm not politicizing the university," McGill argues. "I've always been in politics. I have even urged faculty members and students to get involved in any way they can. It's so important for our process."

College presidents have traditionally kept a low profile in partisan politics. One oft-stated reason was that college presidents, by taking public stands, might inhibit the free exploration of issues that is theoretically taking place on campus. Another was the fear that a president, by endorsing a candidate who subsequently loses, could jeopardize public support of his institution.

Indeed, former University of Michigan President Allen Smith counseled that universities should "try hard to be apolitical." the reason, he said, was that "I've seen politicized universities in

Scores Continue to Fall

(CPS)–For the 17th straight year, average Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores have dropped, according to a new report from the College Entrance Examination Board, which helps adminis-the tests.

High school seniors who took the standardized tests during the 1979-80 academic year—this fall's college freshmen—had average verbal scores of 424 and average math scores of 469, compared with averages of 479 and 502 in 1963, when the downward slide began.

Scores

Each week, every week the Student Programs Board presents a 3pm Thursday Movie Matinee so that you can see each of our great films. Going to these foreign, classic, and pop films, single features cost full-time students $1.00 general public $2.00; double features are just $1.50 for full-time students/$2.50 for the general public. Or one Ticket Booklet ticket can be used for either feature.

Ticket Booklets contain 10 tickets, can be shared, are $5 for full-time students/$10 for the general public, and are good for any of the SPB films shown in the 1980-81 academic year. Ticket Booklets can be purchased at the SUB Information Center and at the door of movie screenings.

Each SPB film feature is shown in the BSU SUB Boisean Lounge on Thursday at 3:00pm, Friday at 7:30pm, and Sunday at 6:00pm.
Gay Group Seeks Equal Treatment Law

College Park, Md (CBS)-The last few years, gay students at the University of Maryland have endured physical beatings, frequent verbal assaults, and even the establishment of a formal organization opposing their presence on campus. But the hostility hasn’t been limited to students. In each of the last three years the Gay Community—the campus voice for gays—has fought to add a provision to the campus Human Relations Code that would ban discrimination against homosexuals. University President John Tolz has rejected it each time.

Tolz turned down the gays’ demands once again last month, stating it “meaningless” and supportive of an endorsement of homosexual acts which are forbidden by state laws.

This provision outlawed discrimination on the basis of “expression of sexual preference.”

As expected, the Gay Community was outraged by the president’s decision.

“Tolz’s decision is so retrogressive,” said Tom Clauss, the group’s former president and treasurer, “I would expect that kind of decision from a fundamentalist campus on our part.”

Though Tolz’s rejection has no noticeable practical effects on gay programs or funding, the Gay Community views it as another sign of the administration’s insensitivity to gay rights. For a group constantly on guard against wise-cracking heterosexual students, “We feel like it would have a lot of support, that they weren’t going to tolerate any more attacks by other students on us,” Clauss adds, “that they wouldn’t tolerate any more attacks by other students on us.”

These attacks have evolved into a regular routine on campus for gays here. Clauss says he often called nasty names by other students, and that his roommate had two ribs broken two years ago in a fight with others in his dorm.

Recently, he adds several “straight” students were placed on academic probation after assaulting another member of the Gay Community.

That kind of hostility is common on college campuses. Administrations often don’t shy away from making anti-gay sentiments into policy. Brigham Young University, for example, regularly spied on students, looking for signs of homosexual behavior. Late aggressively, Cornell rushed out a clarification of its equal opportunity policy when it was found that someone had inserted a clause guaranteeing prospective students and faculty the right to “sexual or affectional orientation.”

Larry Gurel, a spokesman for the National Gay Task Force in New York, says the situation may be improving somewhat.

Some campuses have reformed in the last few years, but there are still quite a number who refuse to give gays the same rights as everyone else, he adds. “For them,” he adds, “the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) has filed lawsuits against them, and we’ll fight until we’ve made it equal for gays in all campuses.”

Indeed, fighting is one of the issues at Maryland. “I never go out at night near campus,” says Clauss. “People know me, and I’d just prefer to avoid any hassles.”

The controversy over gay students became so bitter last year that a Straight Students Association was founded to lobby against gay rights. The group actually held a “Fag Bash” in which they burned a homosexual flag, and then threw it out of a dorm window.

“We put a complaint with the police and the school’s human relations board. We feel like it would have been killed, “speech dealing...” Clauss says.

Clauss adds that many gay have been reluctant to report assault incidents for fear of provoking retaliation. And with an sympathetic administration, he says, gays will continue to hesitate to bring such problems before the school’s human relations board.

To alleviate fears of university inactivity on such matters, Chancellor Robert McKeever, who supported the amendment, has ordered a memo sent to the heads of academic and administrative departments, noting that although the gay rights amendment has been killed, “speech dealing...” Clauss says.

Greek Interest Rises
Boise State to Set up New Frat

The idea of people banding together in fellowship for mutual help and development is as old as mankind. The need is glaring for the incoming student who may feel overwhelmed by a complex campus and society. Fraternities and sororities are the answer to many problems. "I want to dispel the popular conception that the Greek organization are a big party," said Steve Dingman, co-ordinator of Student Activities. "It simply isn't true. Parties are a small part of the package." The fraternities and sororities are social organizations that are involved in many positive things. BSU Greek chapters support national philanthropic projects and work on charitable projects in the community.

Julie Woodall, President of BSU's chapter of Gamma Phi Beta, said her sorority is actively involved in one project each semester. "This year we raised money to donate to Sunlight Nursing Home," she said. "And every summer we are always involved in a big event," she continued.

"I feel my involvement has been a real asset to my education," said Woodall. "This social aspect helps take the humdrum out of classes and yet scholarship is emphasized." According to Dingman, other members are always available for tutoring sessions. Chapters also sponsor seminars and conferences on various relevant topics.

"Fraternities don't hide the fact that members have advantages for future employment," said Dingman.

"Alumni have strong ties with fraternity brothers. There's no denying that a Greek will be chosen over a non-Greek when the hiring is done by an alumini," he said.

Interest in the Greek system is increasing. In the late '60's and early '70's, it just wasn't "cool" to be involved, but students are becoming aware of the opportunities.

"There's not a large degree of involvement in BSU's Greek system because of limitations," said Dingman.

Each chapter is allowed a maximum amount of members. BSU will see a change in the composition of the chapters to include more non-traditional students.

"The BSU Greek system is an asset to not only the individual and the community but to the entire campus," said Dingman.

The philanthropic projects bring recognition to the campus and the system produces the kind of student leaders that are real assets, he added. Eligibility for membership is determined by personality, leadership ability, sense of responsibility and the potential for development of these qualities. Due to the fact that many students may know little about the Greek system, "Formal Rush" has been designed to inform the interested student on the opportunities available.

"Rush" is defined as a period during which those students interested in joining a sorority are given an opportunity, through a series of scheduled parties, to become acquainted with the members of all the sororities.

At BSU, Rush is limited to the sororities. Fraternities have a less formal introduction for prospective members.

"Rush is a fair process with each chapter given an allotted amount of time to explain the organization, costs, rules and activities," said Dingman.

Rush allows the students to decide which chapter they prefer and allows the chapters to decide which students they prefer. This fall all students desiring membership were accepted into a chapter.

Hazing, or a traditional initiation process that intentionally produces mental or physical discomfort, is not a part of BSU's Greek system.

Nationally, students have died in the hazing process," said Dingman. "But at BSU, the "Animal House" image simply is not realistic.

The Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity (ATO) is an indication of the increase in interest in Greek life. An addition to the existing seven fraternities and sororities, it is being formed to fill a need within the existing system.

Brad Hardaway, vice-president of ATO, said becoming a full-fledged chapter is a long and involved process and takes commitment and hard work from the initial members.

ATO was initiated by a group of men with similar objectives, and more concrete things have evolved because of hard work, Hardaway said.

The main objective is to break away from the "beer-drinking" image and develop a chapter emphasizing academic, athletic and leadership abilities.

Ranked in the top ten fraternities nationally, ATO is popular in the South and the East. The National organization reviewed Idaho schools and BSU was offered the opportunity to set up an ATO chapter.

Travels on the Istanbul Express

by Meg Ferdefy
Arbiter Staff

"They can't turn us away!" I nagged to Sami. "By God (or by golly) we've driven the entire length of this city's freeway, they even paid a toll on it. We finally found this campground and they tell us 'no room'? Where's my passport? I'll go talk to them."

First day in Istanbul. Turkey. 9:00pm. We were three people in a VW bus—Betsy, my best friend, Sami, owner, and driver of the bus (except when I helped drive, and I.) We'd just traversed Bulgaria to the Turkish border where we had had to wait for a 24 hour customs-check.

The approach to Istanbul had been nothing less than harrowing and hair-raising. Bulgaria's traffic is composed of a majority of Soviet-made semi trucks, but there were enough small car motorists on the road to play a form of chicken on the two-lane highway. We were hoping that the Turkish roads would be better. Fat chance. The Turks were even more intent on playing the highway Hannah games.

On the roadside, little boys, 8-10 years old, were burning cigarette smoking with strokes of their arms. They were selling 'pack' - pack. Occasionally the truckers stopped and bought them for about 1 Lira per pack.

Another roadside attraction was the abundance of head-kneifilled women bending over the crops in the fields, tending them by hand and hoe.

In a majority of agricultural areas, field work is done in the large part, by women (including boys and men). As we neared the outskirts of Istanbul, the simple two-lane road widened into a totally blank, laneless boulevard, but that was at least divided from on-coming traffic.

Something like the nearest American four-lane highway does not compare with the breathtaking attitude of a Turkish free-for-all-way. Drivers honk to tell you to get out of the way or to say hello.

At the wheel of the well-traveled WVBus, I surprised myself at how aggressive you get when confronted by a sea of autos that is intent on beating you to the next hole in the crowd.

"You should be a taxi driver," remarked Betsy.

And so, in this fashion, I missed the first glimpse of that breath-taking Istanbul skyline.

We retraced the tortuous distance to the camping ground, which we discovered at the end of town where we had originally entered. Once finally at the camp, they turned us away.

In our passports still have some advantages in some countries—with this you are required to present a passport at international campgrounds as a deposit, and plenty of righteous indignation. I went into the receptionist office where Sami had just been refused entrance.

"Is it because of our Arabian friend?" I asked.

"Yes, the receptionist replied, somewhat sheepishly, citing a few cases where Arabs admitted to the camp in the past had made a mess of it, behaving like 'gypsies' or 'animals.'"

Since then, it is Yesilyurt camping's policy not to accept Arabs.

"But you see, my friend is not an Arab at all; he's a Kurd from Iraq, and in the second place he's a fine man, a good son—he has never here to meet his parents country and are not aware of business possibilities. In that case, counseling is available in the Career and Financial Services office."

Actually, Rapp said, once a liberal arts graduate gets his feet in the door, he can probably negotiate, or get the job in business and government. Naturally anything highly technical like accounting or computer programming requires special training, but liberal arts graduates can go into management, sales, and marketing.

The students need to take the initiative, to find out what their choices are, and what they need to do to get a foot in the door before being jolted by the job market upon graduation, Rapp said.

With a little careful planning, liberal arts majors actually can have their cake and eat it too.

imaginative, extended his hospitality to the guests. Osman had stayed at the camping safely. It was the main drive of the museum that was always ruled by the Koran and the Sultans, as divine administrators of the world. This was the life of the museum which boasts among other things, the magnificently restored, blue porcelain tiled Harem, fountains, a war museum and the Sultans' state garments. But the best exhibit of all is the collection of the gargantuan and gorgeous Sultans' jewels. We quit the place after meeting the assistant director of the museum (an old school chum of Ahmet's). We were only three together that day, Betsy, Ahmet, and Osman had stayed at the camping to work. We were sent on ahead to stay in town to do some work at his Socony organization office. He told us that he'd called soon to make sure we had arrived at the camping safely. But we was he who should've worried for his safety.

Five minutes after Ahmet waved gule-gule (bye-bye) to us on the bus, another bus pulled up, disgorged people, and several terrorists opened fire indiscriminately on the people waiting at the bus stop. At least three people were killed where we'd been 5 minutes before, and where Ahmet was sitting to catch a ride back into town. Ahmet related the story in broken English, over dinner that night. The next day the ex-prime minister was assassinated, and then the day after that, another terrorist attack was made at one of the ferry ports on the Bosporous near the Galata Bridge.

We were at this scene of ruthlessness and reprehensible slaughter where about five people were killed—this time the day after. I reached down to pick up a pamphlet, one of many that were scattered about. I asked, "What's this?" Osman replied, "That's a political tract the terrorist distributed before their attack."

Gustave Flaubert, a 19th century French novelist wrote, "While saying goodbye to Istanbul I was deadly sorry." Flaubert, I salute you! Better to be deadly sorry than dead, I always say.

I went to return to Turkey, for it is an incredibly beautiful country. I have no regrets about our 11 day stay in Istanbul, despite the violence and the despisiable discrimination of women. I want to tour the country by a VW bus—maybe, Turkey is only as big as Idaho, Washington, and Montana put together. Turkey, anyone?"

Score: The Heavenly Host Exits Office. The Landlord is happily arranging his new fall collation of back-country existences as his business agent, Mr. Gabriel, boswells him in his Golden Trumpet un under his arm.

The Landlord: Let's see, I do think that I moved that super nova a few parsecs to the left...

Gabriel: Excuse me, sir. But you really must do something about those lenticulars on that tiny little planet you love so well.

The Landlord [agnign]: Earth...What now, Gabriel?

Gabriel: It's these millions of evangelical Christians, sir. Their pastors are organizing them into a mass political movement.

Landlord: They're good, me-fearing people, Gabriel. What's wrong with them?

Gabriel: Well, sir, their pastors are telling them that campaigns are true Christians and which should be eliminated. And, as those pastors are presumably speaking for you, sir, they are, in effect, claiming that this politician or that politician has your endorsement.

The Landlord [growling]: That's odd. I don't recall endorsing any politicians lately.

Gabriel: Exactly, sir! They're guilty of unmitigated blasphemy. Hopefully raising his trumpet shall I sound The Eviction Notice now, sir?

The Landlord: No, wait. Gabriel, I've only been playing children's games. Perhaps I should give them more direct guidance and help them get their priorities straight, by which I mean, all those evangelicals are right! It's high time I got into this political endorsement business.

Gabriel: [jerkily]: Oh, fine, sir. Would you care to start with which six of the 42 citizens running for the Hopkins County, South Dakota Sewer Commission are the most-you fearing moralists?

The Landlord: Can't we begin a bit higher? Who's running for president?

Gabriel: The two leading candidates are Jimmy Carter and Ronnie Reagan.

The Landlord: "Jimmy" and "Ronnie"? Well, sir, I'll buy it. But I don't believe he's asking that of me.

Gabriel: Well, as I recall, your motto is "Together-A New Beginning." And Jimmy's used to be "Why Not The Best?"

But I don't believe he's asking that question anymore.

The Landlord: In any event, I will. I can just write, "I urge you to vote for Jimmy" and "I urge you to vote for Ronnie." Then I might dispatch the Heavenly Host and Marching Band to descend on the South Bronx atop a pink cloud during prime time while playing "Happy Days Are Here Again.

Gabriel: It would pre-empt "Love Boat." And you could stage a star-studded rally in the Hollywood Bowl—using real stars.

The Landlord: Easier done than said. But which candidate should I endorse, Gabriel? Gabriel: Well, sir. The first of all, Jimmy's a bumbling, indecisive, incompetent opportunist with a mean streak who will drive the country into bankruptcy.

The Landlord: Then it's settled. Ronnie is...

Gabriel: A simplistic, empty-headed, jingoistic, second-rate politician who will drive the country into war. So which one do you have in your your-young, wise, and many: endorsed, sir? Sir?

The Landlord: [who has returned to his constellations]: No, on second thoughts, I do believe one would be better balanced with that supernova to the right and down a light year or two.

Letters to the Editor

Guest Opinion—

by Cathy Hancock

This fall approximately 2.5 million students will take one or more of the standardized multiple choice exams administered by the Educational Testing Service, an organization that sells more tests than Ford and General Motors combined sells new cars. The ETS was created by some of the most powerful corporations, universities and foundations for the purpose of measuring "aptitude." "Aptitude" is defined as achievement in areas necessary for future success. The basis of the ETS claim to measure aptitude is the tests' ability to predict future performance. For example, the SAT scores are purported to predict accurately a student's 1st year grades in college. How well do they predict? According to ETS valid studies conducted between 1964 and 1974, the SAT is more accurate than random chance only 12 percent of the time in predicting 1st year college grades. Rather, the study found that high school grades alone were twice as good as the SAT in predicting college grades. Various kinds of biographical questions and personal rating scales were found to predict college grades nearly as well as or better than test scores.

Standardized tests' predictions of success outside of school were no better. In fact, the best predictor for future accomplishment was found to be information about past accomplishments. If these standardized tests are predicting future success no better than random chance would predict, then exactly what is their function?

The testing industry's ultimate defense rests on equity. The tests were created to broaden the pool of talent open to colleges by providing a systematic way to compare Suzy from Detroit with Johnny from Los Angeles. However, ever in order to do this equitably, the tests must measure accurately across all subcultures. Minority students have consistently scored lower than white middle and upper class students on ETS administered tests. However, the inequity is not so much racial as it is economic. Studies have shown a significant positive relationship between students' scores and average family income. Yet, the tests are still designed to predict the higher the score. In addition, national merit scholarships are awarded on the basis of PSAT test scores. So this infers that the National Merit Scholarship is nothing more than a subsidy to the upper class. These people are skeptical as to whether tests even measure that what the tests measure is exposure to upper middle class culture and thought patterns required to do well on the tests parallel the logic and thought patterns required to do well in this type of upper class culture. This aspersity is more than reflected in the type of questions asked, and the logic and thought patterns required to do well in any upper class culture. I read with pleasure your front page article of October 1: "KBBSU Expands Program Format." I am glad that KBBSU is able to expand so intelligently, and that your paper is giving the station the coverage it deserves for that expansion.

I feel the need, however, to correct one minor error in the article which claimed that "No other station in the Boise area offers more classical music than KBBSU." I assume that by "more" you are referring to the amount of time dedicated to classical music, and if that is the case then I'm afraid KBKY does, in fact, offer more classical music.

Our station currently broadcasts two hours of classical music, at 10 am. and 4 pm., every weekday. We will continue airing our morning broadcast at 6 am, until our hours are cut in November. (KBKY operates from sunrise to sunset). On Saturdays we broadcast an hour of classical music at 10 am., and also a recorded concert each week by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at 3 pm. By my calculations, KBKY broadcasts over 20 hours of classical music, with many hours "more" than the 12 hours offered by KBBSU each Sunday.

It's a small matter, but an important one to us. We're glad that the Boiseans have two alternative radio stations, and are proud to be one of them. We've lived through the fact that we survive by selling advertising we will continue to stand firm, as has KBBSU, in providing Boise with intelligent and creative programming. And we're happy to offer Boise radio listeners with a full spectrum of musical alternatives.

Sincerely,

Problems

In her article last week, Sally Thomas showed her ability for rhetoric but fell short of her responsibilities toward the student body. Instead of working toward solving the problem of student tickets at football games, Sally felt it was more appropriate to tell students what their rights were not.

At full enrollment at BSU topping 10,000, why are there only 4,500 seats available for full-time student use? Why, when student tickets are sold out on Wednesday, are general admission tickets sold on Saturday? Why should students get bus seats because general admission ticket holders arrive early and sit in student seating? Why should students have to come to games two hours early to get a decent seat, while the non-students come right at kickoff time and have their seats waiting? What gives the BSAA the right to constrict a large portion of the stadium parking lot while students must walk a mile to get to the game?

These and other questions need to be answered and it's Sally Thomas' job to help the students, not to write articles that tell a touching story of a poor student sitting at home listening to his school game on the radio.

But I don't want to just criticize either, so here are a few possible solutions: 1) increase the student seating and make it a flexible system where general admission tickets will be converted to student use if there is a great student demand. This can also work the other way, if the student demand is low, more tickets can be sold as general admission. 2) Each ticket should have designated seating. Both general admission and student tickets should have a seat number specified before purchase. 3) Require picture I.D. when giving out student tickets. I'm sure that with the right imagination, other solutions could be found to give students a fair break. After all, it's our team, our stadium, and our school. No full-time student should have to pay for a general admission ticket because there are no student seats left.

Alcohol Awareness

Editor, the Arbiter

After burning myself out partying Friday, I decided to do something quite unusual. I went to the Bronco football game sober. Upon entering at the gate, everything seemed about normal. A Gestapo-type policeman asked to check my pack. Seeing my flimsy bag he, sneeringly, asked what was in it. I said it was empty. Enjoying the look on his face, when I found I wasn't lying, I continued into the stadium.

Breathing heavily, in the thin air of the upper tier, I joined the student mob at the 50-yard line. The crowd was roaring and the betting was pouring. Gallon jugs of whiskey, wine, and beer appeared like magic. Occasionally, a head rush would occur as clouds of nofer smoke drifted over. It was a normal football game.

After the first hour people were fairly bored. But, couple beside me had finished their bottle and were greedly drooling on the students, in front of whom, had come better supplied. The cheering and yelling gradually subsided as individuals found they were incapable of standing, much less screaming.

By the third quarter, everybody was looking at their empty bottles with a glazed look. Once in a while someone would ask what the score was. Then a brilliant idea emerged, "Let's go to the RAM!" said a student yeled. A graying mumer went through the crowd.

Then suddenly, I was all alone. Disappointed that my stomach wasn't in condition to join my friends. Yet, secure in the knowledge that next week, I will once again be able to join those noble people in what college students do best.

Sincerely,
Andrew Garber

Netters Unbeaten

(Boise State University)-Sporting a 3-0 dual record in fall competition, the Boise State tennis team will probably schedule one more match to close out fall line-up, according to tennis coach Bus Connor.

The Broncos posted a win over Idaho State in the first match, and this past week downed the Bengals and Utah State.

BSU topped ISU 8-1 and nipped Utah State 5-4 in an outstanding tennis meet. Three singles matches went to three sets and two doubles matches went to three sets.

BSU's number one and two players, Steve Appleton and Eddie Perkins, each were double winners in singles play. Number four Mike Macado was also a double winner. Connor did some experimenting with numbers five and six, with those players coming out with a 2-2 record in the two matches.

The doubles team of Macado and Perkins, playing at number two, was also a double winner.

"Utah State has a strong lineup and we played very well in beating them," Connor said. Connor was especially pleased with his freshmen, John Marshall and John Click, who pulled out a three set victory in number three doubles to win the Utah State meet.

weakened a conference that gained a lot of its stature from their presence. The WAC's decline has, to a certain extent, set the stage for the Big Sky's transition to the national level of play. Although the conference has always been respectable in its own right, national recognition can only occur when BSC teams perform well against big-name schools and in post-season competition.

But while some team will always emerge from the BSC to appear in post-season play, it is the responsibility of the member schools themselves to schedule tougher opponents and thereby enhance the conference level of play.

Obviously, this is difficult for some Big Sky conference schools who have trouble enough competing at a regional level. Yet, it's only when scheduling changes occur and more Big Sky schools play Utah and UCLA and whoever else that the conference will become more prominent on the national scene.

It is indeed a painful, humbling, growing process, but one which must clearly occur if the Big Sky is to break free of its obscurity.

Anthony Burt (½)

I confess, I'm not much of a Robert Redford fan. He's so middle-class sensuality. Did you see anything but good, clean fun in Hot Rocks? How messy was the massage to a Butch Cassidy? How grimy the Chicago of The Sting? Face it, Redford's a pretty-boy and his world is too often too pretty—it's that world of uppersware Homos folks in the west suburbs of Boise still dream of. Now Redford's a director and he still smirks as nice as your Tidy Bowl. Ordinary People, like The Sting, is all soap-box and attractive. The film's set in a beautifully autumnal world—not unlike Harrison Blvd. or Warm Springs Ave, this time of year. Each camera shot is tasteful and oh-so-discreet. And so self-conscious. Only the acting of Timothy Hutton (A), Donald Sutherland (B+) and Mary Tyler Moore (D) save the Psych 101 plot. (Judd Hirsh gets an "A" for his brilliant rendition of a therapeutic ham.)

Holly Reaves (*)

I don't remember the last time I was so Devastated by a movie (even Star Wars left me relatively intact). To offer some paltry, inexpert comment on the brilliance of this film seems ridiculous at best...go see it.

Kari Knapp (*)

Robert Redford's directorial debut is nothing short of brilliant for this is no ordinary film. In this subtle yet powerful moving drama, Redford has created a study in guilt which debilitates and strengthens simultaneously. Ordinary People shows us that guilt is a self-destructive process that we must ultimately overcome if we are to survive. While the film gives no clear solutions to the problem, CONTINUED TO PAGE 14

Pulitzer Prize-Winning Play

"Our Town" Opens at BSU

"Our Town," a Pulitzer Prize-winning play by Thornton Wilder, will be presented Oct. 17-25 at 8:15 p.m. in the Subal Theatre by the Boise State University Department of Theatre Arts.

Dr. Charles Lauterbach will direct this production about daily life and events at a town in the turn of the century. With a cast of 30, "Our Town" reconstructs a simple yet panoramic view of a bygone era with marriage and death.

The story revolves around an aging Beaver Cleaver and his parents who learn they have feelings and should express them. This film, see, is about people relating. This film is big box office. And yet, maybe it should be a hit in Boise. Consider your entertainment alternatives: Pilt's 8th Street Marketplace is showing The Sound of Music. BSU's "Our Town" department has housed the Boise Theatre (?) department has housed Our Town out of mothballs. By contrast, Ordinary People may seem like extraordinary entertainment.

Marianne Flagg (**)

Ordinary People, directed by Robert Redford and written by Alvin Sargent, is easily the best film of the year thus far and should be crowned with at least one Academy Award in April.

Redford, the director, like Redford the actor, displays infinite taste, subtlety, restraint, and elegance in his work. He cares about the characters and their feelings. He tries to put across, and that care adorns every frame of the picture.

Sargent has done great justice to Judith Guest's novel; the first half of the program concludes today (not to mention movies in the theater)...

The acting, performed with consummate elegance, is the best acting one can find in films today...The ordinariness of these characters is the very quality that makes them and the film so touching...Judd Hirsch is also excellent as the boy's shrink, but for me, the most telling and wrenching performance is Mary Tyler Moore's. Cast as a woman emotionally trapped in superficiality, Moore gives the best performance of her career to date.

Redford and Moore might easily have copped out and made her character more sympathetic in the end, dragging out Mary Richards on this way, but the movie's vision of our own will is rare, uplifting, and worth discovering, if only in the power of our own will.
