Fee slush fund pays for track renovation

Raub Owens
News Writer

Bronco Stadium's track is getting a $580,000 face-lift this summer in preparation for an NCAA track and field meet in 1994, and students are picking up the tab.

"The track is not in terrible condition, but it needs to be replaced," said Dave Cooper, an associate architect for BSU.

To meet the exacting specifications of the NCAA, the entire track must be resurfaced, and sites for all other off-field events must be constructed.

"You want to provide the best possible situation that you can for the athletes coming in," said Ed Jacoby, track and field coach for BSU. "This is the Final Four of track and field," he said.

The familiar blue urethane track will be replaced by a red cinder-colored surface.

"We're a little tired of blue. I'd like to get back to a normal-colored track," said Jacoby.

The $580,000 is being taken from a bond fund reserve account that is generated through student fees. The reserve account currently holds about $1 million. The money is collected through student fees attached to the Pavilion, the Lyle Smith Stadium and the new day care center that is still on the drawing table.

"I'd have preferred to use other funds, but I think that the benefits of the event being here should outweigh any consequences," said CJ Martin, ASBSU president.

Construction is scheduled to begin early in June, with a completion date of July 31.

Skateboarding banned at Boise State

Rick Overton
Editor-in-chief

Shoe gazers may have noticed some new campus sidewalk graffiti last week. But unlike the usual chalk scribbles, these new messages are written permanently in yellow paint.

"No skateboarding."

Skaters have long been the subject of ire, but only recently have Boise youths become outlaws.

"The reason this was put out was to stop vandalism, not to stop skateboarding," said Gene McGinnis, director of the Physical Plant. McGinnis was referring to the potential for loose or airborne skateboards to scrape paint, chip concrete or dent wood and plastic surfaces.

McGinnis issued the work order which called for the messages to be painted, but the issue has been brewing for some time. A number of administrators have expressed frustration with skaters over the years.

Sgt. Dick Kersting, campus sheriff, said he was unable to act on the problem until a rule was publicly posted—thus, the painted sidewalks. Kersting said no citations have been issued.

According to McGinnis, BSU students aren't causing much of the damage. "You're going to find high school students here after hours doing the vandalism," McGinnis said.

According to Idaho Code 18-5815, violators of the new rule may be in for a stiff penalty. The law, in a chapter ironically titled "Conduct at Pleasure Resorts," sets a fine of no less than $10 and no more than $100, or imprisonment for not less than five days or more than 30. Repeat offenders could conceivably face a combination of both.

Warnings may not reflect actual university policy

Idaho law does not ban skateboarding... exactly.

"No Skateboarding, Idaho Code 18-5815," appeared painted on BSU sidewalks last week, but that portion of the law does not explicitly mention skateboarding.

The decision to ban skateboarding on campus was made specifically in a work order issued by Physical Plant director Gene McGinnis. McGinnis, responding to requests from Campus Sheriff Dick Kersting and many in the administration, ordered the rule painted on campus sidewalks.

Outside of that work order, no university policy recognizes a ban on skateboarding. Idaho Code 18-5815, the 1972 law cited in the sidewalk painting, outlines punishment for violating any public facility's rules and regulations, but does not stipulate what those rules and regulations might be.

This is how the law reads:

18-5815. Conduct at pleasure resorts. — Any person violating

News in brief

Forum eyes future of Women's Center

Students, faculty and staff are invited to a forum to discuss the future of the BSU Women's Center.

The discussion will be in the Student Union's Bishop Barnwell Room Monday, May 3, at 4 p.m.

The purpose of the Women's Center is to provide educational programs and services to women and men students, faculty and staff. Programs and workshops will also be open to the community. The center will place special emphasis on programs serving the needs of all women students, including non-traditional, single parents and women of color. In addition, the Women's Center will work with other groups to raise the level of awareness concerning gender-based issues throughout the university and to focus on topics of access and equal opportunity.

An advisory board for the Women's Center has been approved by President Charles Ruch. The purpose of the advisory board will be to cooperatively recommend or advise in the establishment of policy and priorities for the operation of the Women's Center. The board will consist of 15 positions that will include students, faculty, staff and community members.

Anyone interested in serving on the board or having input regarding the goals of Women's Center is encouraged to attend.

For more information, please call Margie VanVooren, dean of Student Special Services, at 385-1583.

Faculty to teach in Studies Abroad

BSU faculty members Richard Baker, Max Pavesic, Jan Widmayer and Michael Zirinsky will teach courses at foreign universities this year through BSU Studies Abroad programs.

Baker, a sociology professor, will present several classes this summer on contemporary Mexican society and culture in Morelia, Mexico. Topics will include Mexican values, social stratification, the role of women, religion and the Mexican political system. The course is offered through BSU in conjunction with Centro Mexicano Internacional of Morelia.

Widmayer, an English professor, will teach a summer course on the history of English drama from 1500 to the present at the University of Sussex in Brighton, England. The course, which is offered through the University Studies Abroad Consortium, will explore the English drama and include Elizabethan plays, court masques, Jacobean tragedy and Victorian melodrama.

Pavesic, a professor of archaeology and anthropology, will teach courses this fall in London on "Mysterious Britain" and "Life and Times in the British Iron Age." Classes are offered through the Northwest Interinstitutional Council on Study Abroad and are held in the Bloomsbury area of central London.

Zirinsky, a history professor, will teach NICA courses in London during spring 1994. Course titles include "Islam and the West: A British Perspective" and "Britain and Europe in Modern Times."

BSU provides students with opportunities to live and study in other cultures through NICA, USAC and other travel programs coordinated through the Division of Continuing Education.

Management group chooses secretary

Jody Wilson of Pocatello has been elected secretary of BSU's Construction Management Association for the 1993-94 term. She also has been awarded a scholarship from the National Association of Women in Construction for 1993.

Wilson is a junior majoring in construction management. She is a 1989 graduate of Pocatello High School and is the daughter of Richard and Sandra Wilson of Boise.

The new team of ASBSU senators take the oath of office.

Senators, executives step into new roles in ASBSU

Jon Wroten
News Writer

A sense of passing away was mixed with a sense of renewal last Thursday as newly elected ASBSU executives and senators took office.

Seven new senators and a new executive team took their official oaths of office before family and friends to begin their one-year terms.

CJ Martin and Brent Hunter began their terms as president and vice president, respectively, by promising to use their new position to the benefit of the students of BSU.

"There's a lot that CJ and I noticed in our terms as senators that needs to be done around here. Now, instead of being two voices out of 18, we can represent the whole university," Hunter said.

For many new senators, this year's unprecedented number of new faces also means also a new chapter in relations between the ASBSU Senate and the students.

"I want to move ahead and open communication lines between students and the senate," said Kevin Knight, the newly-elected senator from the College of Arts and Sciences.

The new College of Technology senator, Erik Holinka, said opening up communication meant opening up communication to everyone.

"I want to be a voice for the concerns and opinions of the student-body as a whole, not just a select few," Holinka said.

Another concern of the new senators was to bring a more positive atmosphere to the senate chambers. Sen. Darrin Gleiser, representing the Graduate College, said senators and students need to see the senate in a positive light, not a negative one.

"I believe the students at this university want to hear what's positive that's going on, instead of always what's bad," Gleiser said.

While six outgoing senators were finishing their time on the 18-member council, one promised to keep his eye on the new members.

"I'm going to miss this place, and I really hope that the senate will continue to represent the student body, as is their elected responsibility. But, I'm still going to be a thorn in their ass," said outgoing Sen. Sean Lee Brandt.

Pavilion books car sale in student parking spots

K. Neilly Cordingley
Assistant News Editor

As if there isn't already a parking problem on campus, earlier this month, Miller Stephan Honda drove a "mini dealership" into the stadium parking lot. It didn't leave for a week.

According to the dealership, there were in excess of 300 cars on display at BSU. But Charles Spencer, assistant director of the Pavilion, said the car sale had "no impact on student use of the parking lot."

Spencer said Miller

Stephan usually comes once each year, and then there is one car show during the summer.

Dealerships rent the space, and the money goes to support the Pavilion's $1 million budget.

"All the money goes to support our budget so we are not a burden on the taxpayers or the students," Spencer said.

If anything, Spencer said the car sales positively impact the students, helping the Pavilion bring in concerts and other attractions. "What impacts the students impacts us," he said.

When a trailer used to make car deals in was parked in front of Bronco Stadium along a strip of handicapped parking spaces, one student brought it to the attention of the Pavilion.

"We did not know they had parked it there," said Spencer. "They won't do it next time."

Spencer explained that there must be a certain percent of handicapped parking spaces available, and that even with the car sales these requirements can be met.

Speaker: Education is key to help violent crime stats

Jon Wroten
News Writer

Educating the public is the first step in reducing instances of violent crime, a crowd attending the 10th annual BSU Victim Rights Week was told last week.

"A lot of people don't know the ramifications of violent crime on the victim," Corrie Ryan, a victim/witness supervisor with the Boise Police Department, said. "One of the purposes of this week is to educate the community more."

The week started with an all-day conference on Monday, April 19. A crowd ranging from 60 to 200 filtered in and out of the seven sessions that ranged from discussions on homicide and the grief process to a panel on victims of domestic violence.

The most heavily attended session of the day was one on pornography and sex crimes, which drew a standing-room-only crowd to the Grace Jordan Ballroom at the SUB. The day culminated with the march of a crowd of about 60 from the Pavilion to the steps of the capitol.

Last Tuesday panels addressed child and male victims. Wednesday's highlight was a panel examining the relationship between the media and the victim. Session organizers encouraged members of the media to have compassion for victims and to learn how to decide who wants to talk and who doesn't.

On Thursday, participants discussed the possible ramifications if Idahoans pass the Idaho Citizens Alliance's proposed anti-gay initiative. In a session on hate crimes, speakers said 61 percent of gay and lesbian students feared for their safety because of their beliefs, and that attacks, both verbal and physical, against gay and lesbian people increased by 31 percent from 1990 to 1991.

Organizers said they were pleased that attendance was higher than last year. They attributed this to better organization.

"In the past, it has received a minimal response. This year, we had a better turnout, and it went pretty well," Ryan said.

The BSU Library is a place for one to gain information, but recently a student got a quick lesson in anatomy there which was more than she bargained for.

While studying at approximately 5 p.m. early

Workshop aims to develop skills in teaching language using art

Art touches people in a way few other things can. Teachers of foreign languages and English as a second language can find out how to make the power of artistic expression a priceless tool in the classroom.

"Creative Classroom: Using the Arts for Language Development" is a one-credit workshop to be presented by Carolyn Graham from 8:30 a.m.-5 p.m. June 11-12 in the Grace Jordan Ballroom of BSU's Student Union.

The workshop is being offered by the BSU Division of Continuing Education and the modern languages department.

Cost for the workshop is $111 for graduate and $90 for undergraduate credit. Payment is due upon registration and includes a Saturday luncheon.

To register or request a register-by-mail packet, call 385-1702 or toll-free in Idaho at 1-800-632-6586, extension 1702 or toll-free outside Idaho at 1-800-824-7017, extension 1702.

Registration can also be done in person from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday through Friday in Room 237 of the BSU Library.

SUB bristles with false fire alarms

K. Neilly Cordingley
Assistant News Editor

Although students—and the fire department—are often annoyed by the SUB's false fire alarms, all can take comfort in knowing that there are 120 smoke/fire detectors in the SUB for their protection.

According to SUB records, alarms sounded 27 times in 1992 and alarms have been pulled twice so far this year.

Greg Blaesing, SUB director, stressed how sensitive and complex the SUB's fire detection system is. There have been only two incidences when there was actually a small fire, and many people blame the sensitive equipment for the sounding of the alarms. Often, however, this type of malfunction is not the case.

In 1992, 11 false alarms were caused by someone maliciously pulling an alarm, said Blaesing. BSU is billed $125 each time this happens more than five times in a 12-month period.

The Boise City Fire Department responds to approximately 500 false alarms each year. Because responding to false alarms on an emergency basis poses an unnecessary risk to firefighters as well as to Boise's citizens, the cost for the service is high.

BSU was charged $50 for each false alarm after two in a 12-month period that was non-malicious. There were 13 alarms of this type in 1992.

There was one incident in 1992 when an alarm was pulled in order to train SUB employees to pull the fire alarm.

Children add twist to college

School becomes a necessity rather than a choice if you're going to have any kind of future for your child or yourself.

— Lisa,
former single parent/student

Rebecca Jenkins
News Writer

Stroller-pushing, diaper bag-toting students are one of the fastest growing populations at BSU, and anyone who walks across campus, goes to the SUB or attends class has probably seen them.

They rush across campus laden with backpacks and books like most other students, but they usually have something else with them that sets them apart—a baby or child. Single parents are one of society's largest groups, and the evidence is here that their numbers are growing at BSU also.

BSU's child care facility helps these people to cope; 30 percent of the families who use the center are single-parent families, said Judy Failor, director of the center.

"We're seeing more and more single-parent families on campus," Failor said.

Why are there so many single parents on campus? The answer could be that more single parents are returning to school, or that more students are becoming single parents.

The answer is a mixture of those two possibilities.

There tends to be two types of single-parent students—those who were never married and those who are single because of divorce. Those who never married were often already in college when they started their families.

Most students who are single parents from divorce, however, are usually returning to school after several years, even decades out.

Both types of students face different challenges when adjusting to being both full-time parents and students. Here's what some had to say (full names have been withheld at their request):

Sherry came back to school after her divorce to finish her nursing degree. It had been over ten years since she was in college.

"For me, it's been really hard to go from being a full-time mom for 12 years, to being a student also," said Sherry, mother of three.

"My children have a hard time understanding why I'm always looking at my books. They've been so used to me just taking care of them that it's hard for me to explain to them that I'm doing this because I love them," she said. "It's for our future."

The future seems to be one of the biggest considerations of most single parents.

Lisa, a teacher and swim coach who was a single parent while she was in college, felt that once she chose to involve a child in her life, continuing her education became a necessity.

"When you're a single parent, it's your obligation to go to school, or you will stay in a rut—working in fast food for $5 an hour for the rest of your life.

"That's not fair to you or your child," Lisa said. "School becomes a necessity rather than a choice if you're going to have any kind of future for your child or yourself."

Lisa had never been married when she had her son, which she said probably made being a single parent student easier for her than for those who are single because of divorce.

"I made a conscious choice to be a single parent," she said. "I was never in a situation where I relied on a partner to help raise my son, so doing it on my own was all I knew."

"After being married, though, a person would not only have to adjust to returning to school, but to taking care of home and family all by themselves, where before they had a partner," Lisa said.

Being a student brings up other concerns for single parents as well. Child care and finances are at the top of the list.

Many single parents use various resources throughout the community to take care of those concerns.

Health and Welfare has several programs available to help parents out financially: food stamps, Aid for Dependent Children and Medicaid.

Food stamps offer "money coupons" that are as good as cash for purchasing food items. ADC is a money payment received each month from the state rather than, or sometimes in addition to, working. Medicaid is medical insurance from the state that will pay for pregnancy and other medical expenses.

Eligibility to these programs is based on income. These resources are not always enough to get by, though.

"When I was on ADC I only got $260 a month," Lisa said, "which just wasn't enough to pay for rent, utilities, laundry, diapers and all other necessities of living. You learn to do without a lot."

"There's a big difference between needing things and wanting them," she said, "I often babysat on the side for extra money and didn't report it to Health and Welfare. You have to find ways like that to cheat—it's the only way you can do it."

Boise City Housing is another resource that's available. They subsidize rent payments based on income.

When it comes to child care, many parents have family or friends can care for their children. Others, however, have to find a daycare center or care in their home.

Child care costs are often too expensive for single parents, especially if they're students; running as high as $90 a week for infant care.

The day care on campus has reasonable rates, $11 for a full day and $7 for a half day. They offer care only for children who are potty-trained to kindergarten age, however.

Failor said many of their parents get help paying for child care through Child Care Connection, an associate of the Idaho Child Care Program.

"ICC will pay anywhere from five to 95 percent of your child care costs," Failor said. "Many of our parents have 95 percent of their costs paid for through ICC. It's a great program."

For parents of infants, cost isn't the only concern. Child care is much more scarce for infants, said Failor.

"I've probably referred a couple hundred parents of infants to the Child Development Center downtown, and I'm sure they only have space for 10 infants."

"There just isn't much availability of infant care in Boise," she said.

Students have had to take children to class with them, or forgo going to class at all, because of this deficiency in day care.

"I usually take my baby to class with me," Brenda, an education major, said. "I just have no other

Leave your car behind, enjoy a bike ride to work

Rick Overton
Editor-in-chief

Spring is here, and for many—despite the rain—that means bicycling.

The prospect of leaping astride a ten-speed means more than a recreational spin on the Greenbelt; pedaling is a form of commuting.

Several events in April and May are aimed at getting people to consider alternative transportation to work, such as biking.

The City of Boise is sponsoring Car Free Days of Spring, a monthlong program in cooperation with Ada County to promote non-motorized transportation. According to Ross Dodge, project analyst for the Ada Planning Association, Boise is embarking on a major re-focusing of the city's system of bike lanes to make them more usable for bicycle commuters.

Car Free Days of Spring kicked off on April 22 with a Bike to Work Day Celebration at Boise Centre on the Grove.

According to Dodge, Thursdays in May have been officially designated by the city as bike-to-work days. Dodge and the city are asking Boise employers to make it easier for their employees to commute to work by bicycle in May.

A number of other transportation and ecological events are scheduled for April and May.

- Anyone can ride the bus for free throughout the month of May. Thanks to an arrangement between the city and Boise Urban Stages, anyone can enjoy unlimited free ridership to any area served by the bus.

- May 8 is the annual "tending the foothills" day, a combination of garbage pickup and trail maintenance projects.

Bicycling becomes realistic year-round alternative for prof

Even while the snow was piling up in drifts last winter, Stan Steiner was riding his bicycle to work.

The BSU assistant teacher education professor is a committed bicycle commuter, come rain, snow, sleet or hail.

On a few days the drifts got unusually deep.

"The mistake that I made is I should have thrown on my cross-country skis and skied to work," Steiner said.

Students are well-known to live on their bicycles; Steiner is one of a few university employees who have chosen to trade in four tires and a motor for two wheels and a chain.

Steiner first began commuting on a bike as a graduate student four years ago in Laramie, Wyo.

"The big difference between Boise and Laramie is that I swear Laramie is the vortex of the U.S. In the morning the wind was in my face. In the evening the wind was in my face," Steiner said.

The first thing is a frame of mind. Think about what you're going to gain from biking...I don't particularly use my bicycle for the cardiovascular workout, but there are certainly people who do.

— Stan Steiner

By contrast, Steiner said Boise's moderate weather and the Greenbelt make it an ideal city for cyclists.

Steiner said something like biking to campus can be both a positive experience for the person doing the riding, and a part of the solution to campus parking problem.

"I think it is something for everyone. A possibility is to drive your vehicle to a shopping center and bike the rest of the way," Steiner said.

"The first thing is a frame of mind," Steiner said. "Think about what you're going to gain from biking...I don't particularly use my bicycle for the cardio-vascular workout, but there are certainly people who do."

There can be some problems to biking. Parking is one of them, but that shouldn't be anything new for BSU students.

Although he had little trouble finding space on bike racks in the dead of winter—physical plant personnel even got into the habit of plowing space for him behind the education building—Steiner thinks space may become scarce soon.

"Two weeks from now, when we get more bicycles on campus, maybe the bike racks will become a problem," Steiner said.

children enrolled, and a waiting list with 73 names on it. The new facility is really needed," Failor said.

Construction on the facility should start fairly soon, said Failor.

"We chose the architect in February, but we've been at a standstill for two months with the Department of Public Works. We have the money and the location. I don't know what the hold-up is," Failor said.

They hope to have the new center ready by fall semester 1994.

Failor said she feels the university is beginning to recognize the needs of parents who are students.

"The students passed the fee increase for the new child care facility, so I feel that is a big indicator that they recognize the number of parents on campus and the needs they have," she said.

Other resources available to help single parents on campus include the Counseling Center, the Women's Center, New Directions and Students for Quality Child Care.

option, and my professors seem to be pretty understanding."

A new child care facility is going to be built on campus, which will have a capacity for 200 children, including infants.

This should help parents of infants, Failor said, but they will probably only have room for only 12 infants, so a need will still exist for care.

The current facility has a capacity for 60 children.

Try some alternative transportation in May

Grab your Styrofoam helmets, bike locks, and headphones. Throw away the keys to that petroleum-belching machine in the garage and try something new.

Everyone makes a fuss about the parking problem on campus, but it isn't a matter of too few spots so much as too many people trying to park too many cars. May is the perfect month to try some alternatives to the headache of parking tickets, full lots and long lines of cars.

Boise Urban Stages is addressing the problem by offering free ridership throughout the month of May to everyone. Free. Anywhere the buses go.

Not only does this help the micropuzzle of traffic and parking, but it also does its symbolic bit toward the environment. The BUS services nearly all areas of Boise and can transport students to campus in scarcely more time than it would take to drive.

Another way to avoid parking concerns is biking. The city of Boise is encouraging local employers to support their employees commuting to work by bicycle. Every Thursday in May has thus been declared Bike-to-Work Thursday.

It's an idea that many gear-grinding students are already all-too-familiar with. Bikers save on gas money, don't have to worry about parking, get moderate and regular exercise, see the nicer parts of the city on the Greenbelt and get a little fresh air.

Give it a shot. If you currently commute by car, try biking to school for one week. Your petroleum-hungry rust-bucket will never feel the same again.

Don't gut the Library during finals week

Groundbreaking ceremonies for the long awaited Library expansion and renovation are scheduled for May 3.

But, the contractors don't plan to start construction until after school is out—right?

The last two weeks of school are essential research, cramming and information imbibing-time, and the Library is the core of this activity.

The first phase of renovation involves relocating the main entrance to the north side of the building, a move which will dump evening studiers onto the poorly-lit Greenbelt after dark. This move is supposed to be completed prior to the beginning of construction, but based on how things have gone so far, who knows if that will be May 3, or long after graduation.

Starting renovation too quickly will not only interfere with the academic operation of the Library at the most crucial time in the semester, but may risk to the security of those who use it. We hope that those in charge of the Library renovation have taken these concerns into consideration.

The importance of minding your business

Stan's World

Stan Oliver

The biggest thing wrong with American society today is that too many people are trying to impose their wills and moral values upon others who, simply put, are quite happy with the ones they already have.

Many fundamentalist Christians are no longer content with just maintaining their own freedom to worship as they choose; they now feel compelled (duty-bound) to "spread the word," even to ears that don't want to listen.

Many in the pro-life set are no longer satisfied with merely preserving their own rights to do with their pregnancies as they wish; they now want to control the rights of others as well.

The first thing that comes to mind concerning the above is: What's wrong with people like this that want to have it both ways ... that cannot be content to just have the right to manage their own personal affairs—but want to meddle in another's, too?

Is it that they cannot find other important matters in our troubled world that need to be fixed—like, perhaps, some hungry kids, community help projects or environmental concerns—something which affects everybody's world?

Maybe there's not enough personal reward involved to merit the occupation of one's own time for such menial, public concerns; there's no hoopla, no fanfare involved. These goodies come from stuff like dramatic arrest scenes at abortion clinics, gynecologists being gunned down from behind or, perhaps, a Whacko from Waco taking on the U.S. of A. from a bloody-pulpit-in-the-sky-with-no-diamonds. This is the stuff dreams are made of, man. Get with it! There's no glory to be had by helping Granny Goose across the street.

Simply put, some people are so efficient at maintaining their own personal affairs that when they wrap them all up, they arrive at a severe loss for something else to do. The result is that this very same compulsion to fix something overwhelms them to the point that they become driven to poke around in another's personal business.

So, where does all this lead—to confrontation? We live in a pluralistic society. There are some in our society who will handle their personal affairs in a manner that may appall us and offend our sensibilities.

But if their activities are not illegal and don't infringe upon the freedom of others, then these people should be allowed to go about their daily business without fearing interference or reprisals from others. Why? It's the American way; that's why.

We may not always like the way others govern their own affairs, but they are, nonetheless, their affairs, and need to be respected as such—according to the dictates of their own consciences—not ours! If we cannot do this, then we too run the very real risk of losing our own rights!

Opinion

Why BSU is the greatest in the nation

Todd Sholty
Special to The Arbiter

Because I'm here. That sounds like a fairly egotistical statement, but it is something that we, as a student body, need to seriously consider. We wonder what kind of school we are at sometimes. We whine about registration lines, parking lots, prices of a cup of coffee, certain professors, student government, the Idaho game and about 273 other issues. We curse the academic wind, never thinking about the good things that this university offers us.

For instance, an education. It happens that every one of us can get a degree from Boise State University and do whatever we want to, or whatever we dream of. There is nothing stopping any one of us from discovering a cure for cancer, eliminating the national debt, lowering the crime rate, improving our public schools or beating Idaho next November.

I see our student body spending too much time pointing fingers at each other and not enough time looking at the mirror. We look for the scapegoat of the month to assign blame for this and for that, never stopping to think how we can improve our own situation. Of course, it's much easier to pawn off our problems on others. I am as guilty of this as any of us. I spend too much time thinking about how things would be better if only this person would have done that differently. We all fall in that trap from time to time.

There is an unlimited amount of improvements that can be made here if we realize that within us, we can accomplish anything. After a year in student government, I am now totally committed to the belief that we don't have to wear a name tag to get something done around here. We don't need to be in the ranks of ASBSU to make this university better for students. Granted, ASBSU can be a beneficial resource for student concerns, but we need to admit that any of us can get the job done, if we so choose.

We're all tired of the "parking problem." We're all tired of the overcrowding at this university. We're all tired of issues that seem to be ignored, from our perspective. Yet, if we don't get off our backsides and help each other arrive at solutions, then we deserve exactly what we get. Our campus is teeming with students who prefer to pass the buck; students who feel that it's "somebody else's job."

There is an unlimited amount of improvements that can be made here if we realize that within us, we can accomplish anything.

That job is mine. And yours. It's time to stop wondering what ever happened to Boise State and start realizing how fortunate we all are to be here, getting an education. The moment we begin to take responsibility for our education is the moment when great strides will be made in student life. As this academic year comes to an end, please think seriously about how you can make this university better.

This university is the greatest in the nation for the simple reason that we are here: attending classes, playing intramural basketball, logging many hours at the computer lab, stressing over finals, playing frisbee in the quad and enjoying a 65-cent cup of coffee in the Student Union. The next time we find ourselves complaining about Boise State, we need to ask ourselves the following: what can I do to help?

One more thing: beat Idaho.

Emphasis on racial difference is start of discrimination

Dear Editor:

Let's begin this bitch session with some justification (so I don't get lynched by angry minority students who won't bother finishing this or can't stomach the thought of losing the wave of sympathy they have been riding since deciding to pursue a higher education). I do believe that minorities should have equal opportunities. But not at the expense of promoting racism ... but what exactly is that? Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary: n. or adj. racial prejudice or discrimination.

Imagine seeing in a newspaper: "BSU gets scholarship for whites." Or "White to the future." Or "White Student Union invites white students to see BSU campus." Did I hear a cry of "Racist"? Now consider this recent headline in The Idaho Statesman: "BSU gets scholarship for Blacks." No discrimination on basis of race there, not at all. Who hollers "racism" now?

And get this: the black scholarship is in honor of Rosa Parks. Forgotten your Afro-American history lessons? Shame on you. Well, Rosa was the temeritous woman who in 1955 refused to give up her seat to a whiter man and go back to the black section of the bus. This caused a 382-day bus boycott led by the champion of non-discrimination himself, Martin Luther King Jr. This led to the end of the once-popular idea of separate but equal — the whole idea was to put an end to segregation. The irony of it makes me sick. If it doesn't affect you, you might as well drop out of college, because higher education is a waste of your time and money.

You are promoting equality with segregation and discrimination. The logic is mindless, your purpose destructive to the fabric of American culture. Black, white, red, yellow or fake-baked tan, who in the hell cares? Isn't that what we are trying to teach ourselves? We are all people with the same basic needs and desires, and our opportunities to life, liberty and property are protected by the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Only when we stop thinking of one another as people and consider each other's skin color do we become discriminatory. We aren't talking about different cultures here, no matter what our origins: We all participate in American custom — we speak the same language in school, we participate in the same sports, we watch the same garbage on television and buy into the same materialism that is the underpinning of our value system.

"But minorities don't have equal opportunities," a friend of mine, a hispanic woman, said to me. In the ensuing argument she couldn't tell me why need-based scholarships or academic scholarships instead of racist (oops, I mean racial) scholarships wouldn't give these less fortunate students equal opportunities. (Except that if she had to compete with starving white students like myself, she might have had to pay for more of her education herself.)

Why take away a great step in desegregation that was made in this country, and replace it with segregation again? This policy holds true not only in the area of education but in the job market also. And not only races, but all types of minorities. (If I were only a black disabled veteran lesbian woman in today's academic and professional world, I'd have it made.)

The truth is, minorities are given every other opportunity to succeed that the law can provide. Catering to the idea that they live in a white male world and need extra help to make it just promotes the "them" and "us" that makes racism poisonous to our society and generates hostility (i.e. from less thoughtful poor non-minority students trying to get a scholarship). Not all blacks or hispanics or Native Americans are disadvantaged, and not all whites are wealthy and have opportunities. Everybody has different circumstances, regardless of where their great-great-grandmother was from.

If we want a truly equal and tolerant society, we are going to have to stop judging people on the basis of race.

Stuart Bryson

Article leaves out several important details

Dear Editor:

Again, let's set the record straight. From your article, "Judiciary rules against senate's cash donation," I find that Justice Asbury and I are in full agreement. In fact, we said nearly the same thing, i.e., "Judiciary only reviews bills which they are asked to review."

Mr. Wroten inadvertently left out the fact that my comments about how I hoped all bills would be treated without bias, was addressed to the ASBSU Senate.

I have NEVER addressed the ASBSU Judiciary, not that I do not have personal reservations about what exactly a "cash award or cash gift" is, or how presenting a donation to a fund or foundation is considered "the use of ... [monies] outside of the club or organization by individual members of for their own personal use. Jon Bell is not a member of Students of Light Technology.

True, the wheelchair provided was for Jon, but, hypothetically, if monies were given to a club by the ASBSU, and those funds went to pay a guest speaker, who benefits from the monies? The students indirectly benefit from the speaker's abilities, but only the speaker uses the money for their own personal use.

The same thing could be interpreted about giving monies to clubs so they can go to conventions or have a party. The food is consumed by an individual for their own use. The beds they sleep in are for their own personal use (I hope). Even the educational experience or information they receive at the convention is for them to use individually. Education is an individual experience.

Where do we draw the line? When we draw a line, how arbitrary is it?

I would only hope that those involved with addressing bill 38 to the judiciary will champion the cause of questionable appropriation by seeing that all bills are reviewed in a nondiscriminatory and fair way by seeking judicial review of all funding allocations.

I have always supported the ASBSU Senate in their decisions. I have, and continue to support Sen. Terry Jones' right to take any and all bills for judicial review, and I support the judiciary in their decisions. I may seek further clarification, but I recognize that bill 38 is seen as unconstitutional.

Now, will The Arbiter allow me to take off the silky new black hat you so much want me to wear and allow me to replace it with the old, chewed up, worn and tattered white hat I would like to wear.

I don't see anyone involved in the bill 38 scandal as being wrong. Those involved have sought to do what they saw as being in the best interest of the students they represent.

That's all.

Jerry Squires
former president, Associated Students of Light Technology

Program explores right-wing politics

What is meant by the terms "right" and "left" in American politics? The Public Agenda, a cable show produced by BSU's public affairs program in the College of Social Sciences and Public Affairs, will present a program on right-wing politics on cable channel 10 beginning this week. The show will air at 9 p.m. each day.

The Public Agenda will look at who some of the prominent groups and individuals on the right are, their positions on the issues, and what techniques they use to mobilize their supporters.

Cinco de Mayo

Traditional dance, food on program for holiday

Jorge O. Andrade
Staff writer

This weekend the Mexican students of BSU will offer a taste of their culture to the community of Boise by sponsoring the 5th Annual Cinco de Mayo Celebration.

The central act will take place next Sunday, May 2, from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Julia Davis Park Bandshell. Have you had cravings lately for an authentic tostada, a real taco or a hot enchilada? Don't miss this chance. A wide variety of food will be offered by some of the genuine Mexican restaurants in the area: La Chapala, El Gringo, Casa Mexico and Acapulco will be among them.

The program includes traditional dances performed by the Ballet Folklórico of BSU and a folkloric group from Pocatello. But the main attraction will be the election of the Cinco de Mayo Miss BSU. The winner will be chosen from among nine candidates. All of them are BSU students; eight are of Hispanic origin: Olga Olivas, Lolita Hernandez, Maria Casas, Maria Romero, Patty Diaz, Maria Cabral, Irma Tamez, Xuchitl Rodriguez, and one is of American European heritage: Rubin Olson.

Music will also be presented at this event. Two groups, Brotherhood and MC Shake, will participate with rap music in Spanish. Additionally, the sponsors have organized traditional Mexican games for children like piñatas and face painting.

Nobody should stay away from this festival. "The celebration is for everybody, Hispanic and American, children and adults," says Kristina Salazar, one of the organizers.

If you feel like dancing, you'll have a good opportunity this Friday night at the Roller Magic at 2929 Keim in Nampa. This way, "more Hispanics will have the chance to participate in the dance," according to Salazar. She feels the growing Hispanic population of Caldwell and Nampa justifies making the drive to Nampa. The prices at the door will be $6 per person.

During the dance, the sponsors will present officially the candidates for Cinco de Mayo Miss BSU, and they'll also sell Cinco de Mayo T-shirts.

The history of Cinco de Mayo

Kristina Salazar
Special to The Arbiter

One of the greatest days in Mexican history is known as Cinco de Mayo, the anniversary of the 1862 battle of Puebla, in which Mexican forces, against overwhelming odds, defeated French invaders.

The battle itself was not a big victory but gave moral confidence to the Mexicans to win the victory in the long run. The following events led to the battle:

Mexico had defaulted payments on bonds to France, Spain and England. One arrangement was made by three European countries to make a joint naval demonstration against Mexico in order to compel payments to bondholders. Fleets of the three powers sailed for Veracruz, arriving there near the end of the year.

It was announced that there was no intention of conquering Mexico and that they only desired to settle the claims. After those countries had a conference with Mexican representatives and made a preliminary agreement, the British and Spanish fleets sailed for their home in April 1862. After this, the French were eager to establish a centralized monarchy under French control in Mexico.

When the French attacked the forts of Loreto and Guadalupe on May 5, 2,000 Mexican soldiers under Gen. Ignacio Zaragoza drove about 6,000 French men back with serious losses and finally won.

The city of Puebla, Mexico, which had been known as Puebla de los Angeles, changed its name to Puebla de Zaragoza in tribute to the general who had defended it from the French invasion. Ever since, Cinco de Mayo is celebrated with festivities by Mexicans both at home and in foreign countries. In the U.S. it is observed principally in the southwestern states of Texas, Arizona and California.

Rockers invite Boiseans to hang out at Pavilion

Melanie Delon
Assistant Culture Editor

Ganja blues rockers Black Crowes will bring their Southern Harmony and Musical Companion live to the BSU Pavilion on April 27.

"With this tour, we want to create a vibe so you'll feel like you're just hanging out at our pad for the evening," says Black Crowes vocalist Chris Robinson. Since March 27, the Black Crowes have been on the road promoting their second album, The Southern Harmony and Musical Companion.

On April 27, you will see these guys are no strangers to live performances. With the release of their debut album Shake Your Money Maker, they headlined a 19-month tour which included 350 shows and an accumulated audience of over 5 million people.

For this round of performances, appropriately called the "High As the Moon" tour, the Crowes are playing some pretty interesting dates. Earlier this year they entranced an audience of 60,000 at the Great Atlanta Pot Festival and did a 90-minute show in Florida for MTV's Spring Break in Daytona.

With all of the attention, don't think for one minute that the Black Crowes have gone corporate. "We refused the hype," says Robinson. "Where we come from, 'no hype' means we let what the band does speak for itself."

The Black Crowes

The Southern Harmony and Musical Companion is, according to Robinson, "more aggressive, yet in the same sort of strange stance, gentler." For the live version, you can expect to hear all of the Shake Your Money Maker and

Southern Harmony favorites such as "Hard To Handle" and "Jealous Again" as well as other Crowes

The show should contain great music and even an element of surprise. The opening band has been kept a secret. Hard rock group Gutterball had accompanied the Crowes on the Canadian leg of their tour, but as of press time no one at the Crowes' management, record company or the staff at the Pavilion had a clue as to who was opening.

I guess we'll find out when the clock strikes 8 p.m. on Tuesday night, and the Black Crowes enlighten us northerners with a little bit of that bluesy, heartland rock 'n' roll that can come only from the soul of the South.

Mind Bomb overstimulates with groovy eclectic mix

Mind Bomb
Do You Need Some?

Jenni Minner
Culture Writer

A hopelessly addictive injection of ethereal energy oozing with the elixir of life-force intravenously feeding an overdose to each member of their audience allowing them to gorge themselves on the celestial stars punk that all righteous space creatures exude, thus bringing the human race to their knees and leaving them a pulsating crumpled mass of over-stimulated nerve endings.

I don't know if I'm a crumpled mass of over-stimulated nerve endings, but I thought Mind Bomb's CD Do You Need Some? was kind of groovy.

This Chicago band has just shown up on the charts as third most-added band to radio waves, right behind Primus. Not only that, but they've been appearing on MTV and have just had orders to edit their video for inappropriate private parts.

In a few words, Mind Bomb has a kind of eclectic sound, an amebic entity reaching its tentacles into all types of music. According to Shacky Von Krause, sexy man, electric bass, and backing vocals, the band has been influenced by everything that has hit the ear canals of band members: Cartoon soundtracks, The Ramones, farts, belches and KISS are just a few.

Mind Bomb is the epitome of diversity. "What's great about the audiences at our shows is that is you look out there you see everything from Deadheads to punkers." There is something for everyone.

"Do You Need Some" and "Segue" on their CD seems to satiate the alternative, whilst their new self-titled tape has ballads and funk, and a heavy dose of metal. While I'm not sure I like the tape that much, I have to compliment the CD and its accompanying musical bodily functions.

"I think we're sort of a refreshing thing. I mean, grunge has had its day, but this is new ... There's something for everyone."

Mind Bomb is planning to go on tour in May, mainly on the east coast, however. Unfortunately for The Crazy Horse and ensuing throngs of young grunge fans, Boise will just have to wait to see them in the flesh. If you want to risk it on my advice, the CD is good. And it has a neat picture of a microscopic creature on the inside cover.

Group stages play by BSU professor

"Not This Part of the World," a new play by BSU theatre arts professor Phil Atlakson, will be presented May 14-15 by the George Street Playhouse in New Brunswick, N.J.

Atlakson

The George Street Playhouse is a professional theater company. "Not This Part of the World" is a loosely knit collection of sketches about "seeing and believing," Atlakson says. The Idaho Statesman called it "a rattlesnake drama that bites deep into the funnybone."

Art faculty featured in exhibits, journals

Art work by BSU art department faculty members John Killmaster, Jim Blankenship, Catie O'Leary and Mary Witte have been featured recently in exhibitions and publications.

Killmaster's enamel and watercolor piece "Arm and Hummingbird Blue" was displayed April 2-7 in an international competitive exhibition of arts and crafts at the CKI Japan Fair '93 in Tokyo. The exhibit was sponsored by the municipal government of Tokyo, German embassy, CKI and the Tokyo National University of Fine Arts.

Blankenship's watercolor painting "Burley Mufflers" was accepted in the 53rd annual juried exhibition of the Northwest Watercolor Society. The exhibition continues through April 24 at The Howard/Mandville Gallery in Kirkland, Wash.

O'Leary exhibited collages at the Anne Reed Gallery in Sun Valley, Idaho, and the Gallery Route One miniature exhibition in Point Reyes, Calif. Her work is included in the ninth annual North Coast Collage Society National Exhibition, which continues through April 31 in Seattle.

Witte's work also is featured in the North Coast Collage Society National Exhibition. Her digitally manipulated photographs also are on display at the Mountain West IV Biennial Photography Exhibition at Utah State University, and have been featured in the "Paper in Particular: 14th National Exhibition" at the Columbia College Gallery in Columbia, Miss.; "America 2000: Works on Paper" at the University Galleries in Minot, N.D.

A color plate of Witte's work also was included in the January 1993 issue of The Artist's Magazine, and her "Hot Springs Trilogy" print has been added to the Seattle Art Museum's photographic collection.

Boise State dismantles Boise State

Football team wraps up practice, readies for fall

Scott Samples
Sports Editor

It didn't really matter which team came off the field victorious in last Saturday night's football contest at Bronco Stadium. Either way, BSU got the win.

And that's exactly what happened when the BSU Blue team thumped the BSU Orange squad 30-3 in the final scrimmage of the spring practice season.

The intra-squad scrimmage was as close to the real thing as Bronco players will get until this fall when the real football season gets underway. And even though this game didn't count in the standings, it was still important. The scrimmage was the last test for Boise State coaches to use to evaluate their players before the fall practice session begins.

The spring session was the first chance for first-year head coach Pokey Allen and his staff to work with BSU players, who had to learn the new system as well as try to find a starting spot on the roster.

So far, Allen is relatively pleased with the progress of his team.

"I've really been impressed with these kids," he said. "I'm really enthusiastic about coaching them."

The team has been enthusiastic about playing, but in 15 practices the players obviously haven't been able to learn everything.

"I hoped we'd be a little sharper," Allen said.

The quarterback position is one the Broncos are hoping will shape up by the first week of spring. There are three applicants for the job—senior Travis Stuart, who started most of last year's games, junior transfer Lee Schrank, and sophomore Danny Langsdorf—but there was no clear-cut winner after the spring practices.

"I'm waiting for one of those quarterbacks to take charge and be the guy, and I don't have the feeling that one of them has stepped up to be that guy," Allen said.

Stuart, who threw for 74 yards and a touchdown in the scrimmage, said he's not concerned about the starting job just now.

"I just don't really worry about it myself," he said. "I just do the best I can. Whatever's best for the team is what I'll do."

Schrank, who had 110 yards on the day, agreed there wasn't much left to say.

"I think we all (three QB's) came out pretty good," he said. "I guess only the films will tell."

But the beginning of the season is a ways away. When the season starts for real this fall, all the players will have a better idea of where they stand. And besides, there's still time for improvement.

"Once we get the full team on the field," Allen said, "we're going to have a pretty good team."

BSU ends title drought

Scott Samples
Sports Editor

To most people, 19 years is a fairly long time.

The BSU men's tennis team figured that was too long to go without a Big Sky Conference championship, so last weekend the Broncos went out and won their first conference crown since 1974.

While Bronco tennis teams have tried for almost two decades to win another Big Sky title, BSU head coach Greg Patton came to Boise and won one in his first year. And after the long title drought, Patton said the win was a relief.

"It was really exciting to do it," he said. "It's like you wake up one morning and you're 15 and you've got pimples. Then you look in the mirror the next day and you see the biceps and triceps and the complexion's cleared up. That's what it's like for these guys."

The Broncos, the No. 1 seed going into the tournament, breezed through the three-day championships held at BSU. Boise State skunked Eastern Washington 7-0 on Friday in the first round, then knocked off two-time defending champion Weber State 6-1 in the second round on Saturday.

Things continued to go BSU's way on Sunday, when they faced No. 3 seed Northern Arizona, a surprise winner over No. 2 Idaho State. The result was a 5-1 win over the Lumberjacks and the Big Sky title—the result Patton had anticipated.

"I expected it, because I know my guys," he said. "You live with them day in and day out, and I know they share my dream."

The Big Sky crown was the first step in Patton's dream. Now he and the Broncos are looking to a trip to the NCAA championships, which Patton sees on the horizon.

"Look at how good these guys are—and they're getting better," he said.

Boise State has a chance to make it to the NCAA finals this year, but the team's fate doesn't rest in its own hands. The Broncos will make it to the NCAA's if Fresno State wins the Western Athletic Conference next week. If Utah wins, the NCAA will vote to determine whether to send Utah or Boise State. If any other team wins, the Broncos will be finished for the year.

Although Patton would like his team to go to the tournament, he said this was a "two-year season," meaning it was the first of two steps toward fulfilling the NCAA tournament dream. And next year, Patton expects to see the Broncos to go beyond a conference title.

"There's a feeling that's permeated the whole team that's like, 'Hey, yeah, yes we can do it. We'll win a lot of matches and we'll get better,'" he said.

Broncos don't win or lose meet

Scott Samples
Sports Editor

In the big scheme of things, last Saturday's track meet didn't mean that much to the BSU team.

The Broncos couldn't lose the BSU-Washington State-Central Oregon Open Invitational, as it was a non-scoring meet, but neither could they win it.

The individual athletes had their chances to set records—as BSU's Chuck McTheny did in the hammer throw with a toss of 167 feet, 7 inches, breaking the old record by 4 feet, 2 inches—or to qualify for the NCAA tournament. But on a day that was sometimes sunny, sometimes rainy, and almost always cold, conditions weren't exactly prime for big performances.

Still, BSU coach Ed Jacoby said there may have been some advantages in the disadvantages.

"I didn't think that was a real emotional meet for the athletes, and I think it's important to see you can compete then, because there's going to be a time when you have to," he said.

The Broncos did produce some good moments.

McTheny led the men's field events with his new school record and added first place finishes in the discus with a throw of 164-10, and the shot put with a toss of 53-1 1/2. Brad Abbott won the pole vault at 16 feet, Carlos Albury's leap of 23-4 won the long jump, and Jon DeBerry had a jump of 7-0 1/2 to win the high jump.

For the women's field events, BSU won only two of the six events, although three Broncos took the second, third and fourth spots in the long jump. Rubye Jones took the triple jump with a hop of 37-8 3/4 and Julie Jenkins

BSU's Audrey Eddy misses a calf in the breakaway roping contest.

Rodeo back on BSU turf

Scott Samples
Sports Editor

Last weekend, for the first time since 1976, the BSU rodeo club returned to its own stomping grounds.

The last time BSU hosted the Marriott Bronco Stampede on campus, Jimmy Carter was president and Elvis Presley was still alive. The two-day rodeo, held on Friday and Saturday in the Pavilion, returned to Boise State turf after a 13-year absence. For the past few years, the rodeo had been held at the Caldwell Night Rodeo Grounds.

But even with the home advantage, the BSU club had problems getting into the top categories. Only two Broncos—Audrey Eddy in the calf roping and breakaway roping, and Tracy Bruch in breakaway—were in the top 10 competitors of the nine events.

Bruch's attempt to win the breakaway fell short when she wasn't able to rope the calf, and Eddy missed her opportunity as well. Eddy has another shot in the goat tying contest, but couldn't beat Sherry Roach of Ricks College, who finished with a time of 15.6 seconds to win the title.

Out of 11 total teams competing, Weber State took first in the men's division, while Idaho State claimed the women's championship.

Both teams also sported individual winners as well. Jason Eiguren of WSU took home the men's championship, while ISU's Megan Coon was the women's all-around champion.

Eiguren placed first in the steer wrestling contest with a time of 9.5 seconds, and teamed with Brian Roundy to grab the team roping event with a time of 14.3 seconds.

Coon acquired her points by placing second in barrel racing at 27.4 seconds and third in the goat tying event.

Sports Briefs

BSU golfers tie for seventh

The BSU men's golf team tied for seventh out of 15 teams in a 54-hole tourney in Provo, Utah last weekend.

The Broncos shot a team total of 888, tying Hawaii, Cal-Northridge, Utah State, and Utah for seventh.

Marc Rhoades was the top BSU golfer, tying for fifth with a total of 218. David LeBeck was knotted in a seven-way tie for 14th with a total of 219.

Nevada-Las Vegas won top team honors with a score of 859, and UNLV's Edward Fryatt shot a 210 and won the individual title in a playoff, tipping New Mexico's Tim Herron.

Club tourney in question

The BSU baseball club doesn't know where it's going to be playing this weekend. But the team will be playing somewhere.

BSU was supposed to be one of eight teams to play in the Big Sky Conference Tournament scheduled for May 1-2 in Moscow.

But that plan may have been ditched, after host Idaho decided it couldn't hold an eight-team tournament because poor weather conditions had rendered some fields useless. Idaho then cancelled Montana, Idaho State, and Montana State's invitations, leaving just five teams.

Tim Helgerson, BSU's coach, said the three teams were trying to put together a tournament either in Pocatello or Bozeman, Mont. Helgerson said BSU was leaning toward going to that rather than the one in Idaho, if the three schools can get organized by today.

Smith, and Gray combined to win the 4x400-meter relay with a time of 3 minutes, 19.47 seconds, rounding out BSU's wins for the day.

On the women's side, Sara Herman took the 1,500-meter race at 4:43.63, Tasha Bailey's 14.53 time was good enough for first in the 100-meter hurdles, and Wendy McCamish won the 400-meters at 57.05.

Andrea Holmes led a pack of BSU runners to win the 100, edging teammate Misha Looney by .003 seconds at 12.30, while four Broncos took the top four spots in the 200, with Jovita Davis leading the way with a time of 24.52.

Cori Knoeller's 3,000-meter run of 10:27.07 took first place, and the relay team of Lisa Van Gorp, McCamish, Fanya Bryant, and Marty Arguelles won the 4x400 in 3:52.24.

Boise State also did well in the track events. For the men, Jake Miller took the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 15 seconds, Mike Brown's 48.32 was good enough for first in the 400-meter, and Travis Gray won the 400-meter hurdles by .11 seconds at 55.56. The team of Miller, Brown, Aaron

An open minded, fun loving, secure, young white couple with own home and sense of humor desire a single female 18-35 for companionship and a meaningful, fun relationship. We enjoy movies, animals, the outdoors, picnics, and travel. We normally wouldn't place an ad like this but we are having a difficult time finding a female so we understand your reservations, but if you are in a like situation please respond. All responses answered with sincerity. Write to P.O. Box 8735, Boise, ID 83707. Photos and phone numbers appreciated.

Average Joe, SWM, 26, Smoker, Seeks SWE, 21-30 for a date. Nothing to spectacular, just a "good-time" night out. If you like anais nin. Harry Connick, Jr., The Art Museum, the Library, dancing, singing, writing and just B.S.ing on the phone we should meet. If you're not overly religious or political, like Jagermeister shots and Coors Light, hate Madonna's music, are not for an instant boyfriend, we should meet. And if know how to play strip poker and truth or Dare, know how to suck face, or can tie a cherry stem into a knot with your tongue, we should definitely meet. Physically, I'm a young looking cross between Emilio Estevez and Anthony Micheal Hall, with a touch of Doogie Howser. Blue eyes, nice butt, no abs., pecs., or other Marky Mark features, but not fat either. 5'7", 138 lbs. just normal. Looking for a woman to hang out with, not marry and have kids with. Romance optional, but not necessary. If you get serious too quickly, are shallow and self-absorbed, are looking for a sugar-daddy, do drugs, or think that Oprah is queen bee, please write to someone else. Otherwise, drop me a line, maybe a photo. P.O. Box 4302, Boise, 83711.
