Mayoral hopefuls discuss issues

Nancy Gray
Staff Writer

Growth was the major topic at the mayoral forum sponsored by the Idaho chapter of United We Stand and ASBSU last week.

Candidates Wade Fregley and Brent Cole verbally pummeled each other for nearly two hours Friday night. At one point, the conversation grew heated when Fregley addressed the issue of the mayor's salary, stating the mayor recently had a hand in voting himself a $4,000 raise.

Cole said the mayor does not vote during city council meetings unless there is a tie.

bKY JUY Carter asked if they support domestic partner rights.

"I don't think there should be any special rights, no," Cole said.

Later, Cole said he does not support the Idaho Citizens Alliance.

Fregley said there are no special rights in Idaho and there isn't a need to legislate against something that doesn't exist.

"I don't see any need for the ICA to oppose any special rights. And I don't feed discrimination is right on any level," said Fregley.

Both candidates embraced the concept of Community House, a program to help the homeless connect with mainstream. However, the candidates disagreed on how crime and affordable housing should be handled.

Cole said development dollars, not city dollars, would be required for housing projects to ease the problem in the future.

Fregley said Cole was not looking out for the best interests of Boise citizens. He said his campaign has been run without the connection to development or business, but noted Cole's long-term political ties.

The other two candidates, Tracy Andrus and Michael Hall, were not available for the debate.

Plan targets fairness in financial aid

Heidi Smith
Staff Writer

The BSU Financial Aid Department is implementing a new program that will attempt to increase transparency in the financial aid process.

"Our goal is to improve equity and fairness in awarding public and private dollars to needy students by finding where problems may be occurring in the financial aid process," said Debbie Santiago, quality assurance specialist.

The Quality Assurance program randomly selects 280 students who receive aid to participate in the verification of their personal financial aid files. The participation of the selected student is mandatory, and refusal to cooperate results in the cancellation of all financial aid awards. Additionally, students would be required to return any aid they have received.

Those students who are chosen are notified by letter.

They [students] don't need to worry about anything until they get a letter," said Suzanne Graff, quality assurance specialist.

According to Margaret Matjeka, financial aid counselor, they will be searching through student files "to look for errors, finding and fixing areas in the financial aid process where problems consistently occur."

Graff said students should not expect changes immediately because improving on the errors is a long-term project. In a year students should see a vast change, she said.

Matjeka said that if anyone has questions about the program, or if the students who have received letters have any problems, they should contact Graff or Santiago at the Financial Aid Department.

As part of the new program, workshops are being set up for students. Santiago said they will be holding a workshop Nov. 16 for those who are selected.

Board: Uniformity flaw in state alcohol policy

Jen Wreten
Staff Writer

Current alcohol policies are adequate, the Idaho State Board of Education concluded in a recent meeting.

The Board decided in a session in Moscow that current alcohol policies of each Idaho school, which differ on each campus, will not require revision.

The Board, however, said the current policies need more stringent enforcement. Board member Curtis Eaton proposed a new policy which would provide for more uniformity among the various schools' alcohol policies.

Currently, the sanctions for violating alcohol policies range from dismissal from school residence halls on the first offense at the College of Southern Idaho to allowing alcohol only in the rooms of those 21 and over at Lewis-Clark State College.

Eaton proposed a two-tiered system of sanctions to be followed by all state schools. Under the system, a first offense would result in a warning and a person convicted of a second offense would be dealt a suspension of at least one semester from the school.

The board did not adopt any new enforcement policies at the meeting, but Eaton's proposal was held by the board for future discussion on the issue.

The members of the board said they decided not to change the state's policy on alcohol because they wanted to allow students at the state's public colleges and universities an opportunity to show they could act responsibly under the current policy.

The alcohol debate stems from an accident in August in which an 18-year-old girl fell from a third-floor fire escape at the U of I, an incident that Greek officials said was an accident.

"I believe what happened at that party was an isolated incident," said the U of I Inter-Fraternity Council President Shelby Leforgee.

ASBSU officials also expressed approval of the Board's decision.

"I think their original reactions were reactionary and once they learned the ramifications of their actions, they learned the true intent of a college education is to teach us how to ask the right questions and for us to learn how to make our own decisions and to take responsibility for those decisions," said ASBSU Vice President Brent Hunter.

Week of events targets hunger, homeless

BSU students hoping to heighten awareness of hunger and the homeless have planned a series of events Oct. 25 through 30.

"Shattering the Myths: Homeless in Idaho," sponsored by the UMS and United Methodist Students, will be held in the tiled week of events Oct. 25 through 30.

BSU students hoping to heighten awareness of the seriousness of homelessness are sponsoring a panel discussion Tuesday addressing the seriousness of homelessness.

Three of the four mayoral candidates will participate in a panel discussion Wednesday. Tracy Andrus, Wade Froogley and Michael Hall will address the issues concerning "The Hungry and Homeless in Idaho."

A panel discussion Thursday will deal with hunger and homelessness among Idaho schoolchildren.

The events will be held in the SUB.
Campus radio aims to serve community

Corky Hansen

KBSU listeners can expect the station to become more and more involved in community service, accoding to James Paluzzi, BSU Radio Network general manager. "You can make a decision to get involved in community service," Paluzzi said. The BSU administration recognizes the importance of KBSU to the community. "KBSU radio plays really a significant role in the education of students and the service public," said Executive Assistant John Franden.

According to Paluzzi the station's new programs seek to offer programming the commercial media doesn't give to the public.

KBSU has had a significant role in the education of students and the service public.

"What we're really trying to do is provide alternative service," Paluzzi said.

Senate bills target elections

Jon Woten
Staff Writer

The ASBSU Senate hit the election trail running last week with two bills, each of which eliminates Sen. Terry Jones' plan to have better access for people who really need it. The bill, which passed by a vote of 9-8, calls for the election board to place the other two booths where they are more desired.

"Because the two polling places won't be closed, it will allow for other locations that wanted one to lobby the election board for an alternate location," said Jones.

Opponents of the plan said they thought the bill would make voting tougher for students in both build-

Some senators said they thought Senate Bill #4, which passed by a vote of 14-3, would allow more students to run for ASBSU Senate positions.

The bill reversed a bill enacted last year, which prohibited student candidates from running for the same term in student government. In the opinion of supporters, the bill will also provide more direct service to the community and also as a mass media training ground for BSU students.

Involvement by students is welcomed by the station, Paluzzi said. "Any student on this campus can propose a program," he said.

If the proposed program is recommended by a committee, the station's general manager, Jan Buscher, will be produced. If that stage is successful the program will put the pilot on the air. "It really does open up access for people who really need it," Paluzzi said.

Radio Bilingue educar a todos

Segun Paluzzi, KBSU, que dedica la tercera parte de su tiempo al programa, es una de las estaciones en la nacion que lleva el programa "Radio Bilingue."

"Es considerado muy escabroso," Paluzzi dijo.

El programa, que origina en Fresno, Cal., sirve primeramente a la comunidad hispana y a los jovenes que andan con las ruedas en California, Paluzzi dijo. El pro-programa tambien enseña a los miembros de las bandas cómo comunicarse en la calle, cómo da forma de hablar a la policia.

Paluzzi dijo que el programa no sola beneficia a la comunidad hispana, pues en el área de Boise se sabe lo que está pasando en el resto del mundo.

"No sabemos enfrentarnos con estos problemas," Paluzzi dijo.

Tracy Andrus
City/BSU must forge a better relationship
Nancy Gray
Staff Writer

Tracy Andrus has done her homework. The mayoral candidate said Boise needs to change the way it deals with such issues as homelessness, crime and jobs. Andrus said the city needs to form a working relationship with BSU. Andrus said Boise has made a good start by tackling the parking problem, but more needs to be done.

Andrus said she would like to see a system of park and rides throughout Boise so more students can use the shuttle system. "We need to look at BSU's growth patterns so the school can grow as it needs to grow," said Andrus. "We have BSU programs and ACID roads. Boise has to stand up for its rights and work together." Andrus said she would like to see an influx of small businesses in Boise. Andrus said these companies will remain in Boise to grow with the city.

Crime is another Boise concern. Andrus said. She would like to see Boise focus on prevention programs and resource officers working in the grade schools. Andrus said an increase in the number of police officers handling juvenile crime was also needed.

"I feel that's been one of the nice things about this race is that crime is not the chief issue," said Andrus. "One of the not-so-nice things in my opponent Brent Coles' ads portraying Andrus as an inexperienced candidate is:" I would say that any individual, any male individual, with 15 years business experience, would not be questioned," said Andrus. "They're going after me because I'm a woman." "I want to be elected to the office because I'm the best candidate regardless of what sex I am," Andrus said.

Wade Frogley
Candidate is inexperienced, and proud of it
Dave Fotsch
Staff Writer

Wade Frogley decided to run for mayor because he felt no one else was addressing the problems facing Boise. "BSU students and the people of Boise are looking for solutions, and they are looking for representation." Joining this race because I didn't feel there was that," Frogley said.

Frogley said he wears his political inexperience proudly because it sets him apart from the other candidates. He said it's no reason to doubt his ability to effect change.

Frogley's ideas include a Metro Plan that has been on the books for nearly 20 years. "If we have a plan for the city, everything else falls in line, pretty much. You can identify where your neighborhood growth is and identify corridors for traffic flow around those," he said.

Frogley would battle crime with a few more cops, a lot more technology and dogs. He would install Mobile Data Terminals in all squad cars, add a K-9 unit to the police force and create a gang squad. "The cities around Boise are inundated with gangs and Boise is not going to be immune to it," he said.

Frogley said it is easy for BSU students to forget the world off campus, but students should vote because they do affect Boise. Frogley said he may try for office again in the future if he does not win. "I hope Boise is still a good place to live...and if it is, maybe in 15 or 20 years I'll be involved...I got involved now so it will be that way in the future."

The Race for Mayor
Tracy Andrus and Wade Frogley are the two candidates running for mayor in Boise. Andrus is an experienced candidate with over 20 years of business experience, while Frogley is a political newcomer.

The parking problem is a major issue in this election. Andrus has proposed an increase in the number of police officers to handle juvenile crime, while Frogley suggests installing Mobile Data Terminals in squad cars and adding a K-9 unit.

Andrus has already addressed issues such as homelessness, crime and jobs, while Frogley's ideas focus on growth and development. The race is heating up as Boise residents prepare to cast their votes on Election Day.

Brent Coles
Incumbent hopes to build on experience
Kerri Walker
Staff Writer

Mayor Brent Coles is a busy man these days. By going to Coles' office overlooking the Capitol Building, it is obvious after a few seconds that being the mayor and running a campaign is hectic.

The office is filled with his green and white campaign banners and posters and other paraphernalia, as well as a box of recyclable cans. The phone is ringing and people are in and out. The atmosphere is somewhere between a controlled business environment and chaos, leaning toward the latter.

But the hustle and bustle doesn't impede Coles from considering the issues pertinent to Boise.

Growth is the major issue of this campaign and Coles said he has considered how growth will affect BSU and what he can do to help. Considering the existing problem of overcrowding on campus, growth is a big concern for the university and students, Coles said.

Coles has already addressed the parking problem by encouraging students to use Boise Urban Stage, which offers free transportation to students. He said there are over 1,000 students a day who take advantage of the program. He also helped start the BSU shuttle that transports students around campus.

He said he supports President Charles Ruch's proposal for internships and opportunities at City Hall. Internships would provide the opportunity for students to participate in research.

Coles said he supports the request for a new classroom facility which would help to alleviate the overcrowding of classes and provide space for additional classes.

Coles said since students provide quite a large share of tax dollars to the state from sales and income tax, he also supports Ruch's request for a larger budget.
Michael Hall

Bringing city back to citizens
Corley Hansen
News Editor

For Michael Hall, his improbable campaign for Boise City mayor is the beginning of a process that will hopefully end in a better representation of the voting public in city government.

"I'm probably the most illogical choice for mayor that you'll ever meet in your life, but that wasn't going to stop me from running," Hall said.

The janitor/candidate said he represents what the general public ultimately desires in city government.

"A vote for me is a vote against big-business-sponsored candidates," Hall said.

"I don't have ties with anybody. If you think your vote is wasted, waste your vote on me," he said.

Hall said he hopes to encourage others like him to run for office in the future.

"Maybe next time there'll be 10 Mike Hall's out there (running for city office). One of these days we'll take our city back from big business," he said.

Hall doesn't mind that his $54 campaign budget allows him little public exposure compared to the other candidates.

"I'm not going to beat people over the head with my face, although it looks as though I have," Hall said.

Attaining affordable housing for Boise's homeless is a priority for Hall.

"I'm the only candidate that's been ... hungry and homeless and I know what it's like," Hall said, telling of when he lived in his car and survived on garbage. He said this allows him a better understanding of Boise residents' problems.

Hall also thinks the city should provide lighting for Julia Davis Park.

"You go over that bridge [to Julia Davis Park] and it's like a black hole. It's just inviting trouble," Hall said.

Civic candidates eye 4 open seats

Eve Costello

Nine contenders are vying for four seats on the Boise City council in the Nov. 2 election.

There are six seats on the council and three of the seats come up for election every two years, Boise City Clerk Annette Mooney said. The terms are four-years.

This year, however, four seats are open. Brent Coles resigned his seat to become mayor when Dirk Kempthorne was appointed to the U.S. Senate seat last November. Carolyn Terteling was appointed to Coles' seat, and now the seat is open for a two-year term.

Mooney has anticipated more candidates.

"We've given out 50-plus pickets to people who were interested, but only seven people turned the packets in, and there are two write-in candidates," she said.

"People sometimes are hesitant to run against incumbents," she said. Incumbents are vying for each of the seats open this year.

Terteling is running to keep the seat to which she was appointed last year. Joe Diffendaffer is challenging her as a write-in candidate.

Sara Baker currently is running to keep her seat on the council. She is opposed by James C. Curtis and David Callister.

Jerome Map is also running for another term. He is opposed by Thomas C. Monagle and write-in candidate Lee Carey.

Mike Wetherell is running for re-election unopposed.

Elections will be held 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Tuesday, Nov. 2.

Survivors of rape tell of healing process

David Boothby
Staff Writer

Three rape survivors spoke last Thursday about having been raped in their lives at a panel discussion moderated by Corey Ryan, victim witness coordinator for the Boise police department.

They asked that their real names not be used. Here is what they had to say.

Survivor #1: "When I was in the 9th grade I was raped by an acquaintance. There were no intentions. I was raped with a bottle and other various objects.

I said no. At that time, it became rape. The physical damage isn't the worst part of it. It is the emotional crap that I have to deal with that really hurts. I never told anyone about it for five years. It's a pretty heavy load.

"When I told my parents about it they re-victimized me without even knowing it. By pushing me to report it and get a lawyer, by pushing me to go to trial, they were also making me do something I didn't want to do.

"I hate my rapist for the way he made me feel about my father. The biggest thing I wish I could get back is my trust.

"I used to be a trusting person and I miss that. I miss that there's a part of my life that my brothers don't know about. I miss that I can't be as trusting as before, as trusting as I used to be.

"There's a difference between being a victim and a survivor. When you're a victim it's like having an open wound. But when you become a survivor the wound has scarred over.

"What a victim needs more than anything is love. You become a survivor when you learn to say 'I've been raped.'

"It is only when I was able to really feel the sorrow, the anger and the hate that I was able to say 'It was him.' It's not you, it's not all men. It was him.

"Date rape can happen to anyone for no reason. Healing takes a long, long time."

Survivor #2: "I was 15 years old when I was raped by an acquaintance. It was a very violent rape. I wondered if I was going to be killed.

"I was in shock for a couple of days. When I told my mother about it she asked me if I had been fooling around. After that I never really faced it for almost 25 years.

"When someone tells you they've been raped for God's sake believe them. I've since become very close to my mother. It has been very healing to be able to share this with her.

"When you are raped, all friends become suspects. All strangers become suspects.

"What you lose is the illusion that the world is a safe place. You come face-to-face with death. You always carry with you the knowledge that you can be raped at any time, any place."

Survivor #3: "I was the first victim of a serial rapist. He entered my place of business and grabbed me from behind and totally overpowered me.

"He wrapped my head completely in Scotch tape and then sexually assaulted me every way you can think of.

"After the rape he tied my big toes together with a crocheted thread and then did the same thing with my thumb.

"He helped himself to a can of pop, robbed the cash register and then sexually assaulted me some more.

"After he left I cut myself loose and called the police and then my husband, who took me to the hospital.

"I was also victimized by the media, who told me to come face to my place of business."

"I used to be a trusting person but that I'm not anymore. I don't trust people.

EchoHawk proposes plan for victims' rights laws

Nancy Gray
Staff Writer

The muffled laughter pouring from the next room seemed morbid as it filtered into Attorney General Larry EchoHawk’s speech on victims of crime which included tales of murder, rape and harassment.

EchoHawk spoke to about 30 people last week as part of BSU’s Sexual Assault Awareness Week.

EchoHawk told of his experiences as a prosecuting attorney. He spoke of the charred, nude remains of a female murder victim. He spoke of the woman’s family and their insurmountable grief.

“I caught eye-to-eye contact with the sister. I will always remember that,” said EchoHawk.

Echohawk’s unwillingness to forget has led to his crusade for victims’ rights in Idaho.

Currently, EchoHawk is working on an amendment that would add permanent victims’ rights laws to the state constitution. Steve Tobaison, of the attorney general’s office, read the highlights of the amendment, which has 13 points. He said the final draft will not be completed until later this month.

Victims would be ensured the right to fairness and dignity, a timely disposition and right of notification of proceedings. The right of participation and the right to be heard were also addressed.

Victims would be ensured the right not to have to discuss the case with the defense or the defendant, and the victim would have guaranteed access to the presentencing report.

Drafters of the amendment are hoping these rights will lessen the trauma victims suffer.

Michael Kane, deputy attorney general, said in nearly 90 percent of the murder cases he sees, the victims are women.

“The very first case I ever had was the killing of a drug informant, who just happened to be a woman, but the three killers didn’t miss their chance to sexually abuse that young lady who they murdered,” Kane said.

Other crimes which predominantly victimize women include telephone harassment, kidnapping and non-payment of child support.

A rally and formal announcement of the bill will be held Oct. 29 at 10:30 a.m. on the Statehouse steps.

Time has come for GPA merge

The Arbeiter would like to congratulate the efforts of the Faculty Senators working to combine academic and vocational GPAs. This step is long overdue.

We realize there may be philosophical differences between classes from the academic side of BSU and classes from the vo-tech side. Technical degrees train students for specific skills in specific areas, while academic degrees train students in less tangible skills such as critical thinking to be well-rounded individuals.

The fact remains, however, that many technical BSU degrees require academic courses as part of the curriculum. Any course that is required for a degree should be included in the GPA associated with the degree. If academic GPAs are not included with technical GPAs as a measure of the value of the degree, then academic courses should not be required for technical degrees.

This does not mean the philosophies of the academic and technical colleges have to be homogenized and integrated. It simply means that all the courses required for a degree should be used to measure the value of that degree.

Besides, the integration of the GPAs would ease the job of the registrar, who has enough to keep track of already.

Those who argue against this measure believe some fundamental difference exists between classes on auto mechanics and classes on quantum mechanics, and that students who study mass communication know something quite different from those who study the electronics that make mass communication possible.

While we acknowledge a difference in content, we feel this difference is no greater than the difference in content between any two classes at BSU. If we cannot combine GPAs from different kinds of classes, then each department should have its own GPA. After all, no one can easily say how an A in 19th-century British literature compares to an A in human physiology. However, once the decision has been made to combine all grades from a variety of classes, then the exclusion of one type of class has no basis.

What the issue really revolves around is not which type of classes get excluded from the GPA, but which class. Basically, those who oppose the combination of GPAs argue at some level that students who attend BSU to prepare for a white-collar profession are better than students who attend BSU to prepare for a blue-collar profession. What nonsense!

This type of class snobbery has no place at a community-oriented university such as BSU (or any public university). Professors and administrators should make every effort to abolish any institutional policies that serve to reinforce such divisive attitudes. Combining GPAs is a great place to start.

The Ultimate terror

Hey you wanna see something really scary? I'm talking real terror—the kind of stuff that turns your blood cold and lets your bladder run freely into your Dockers. No rubber skeletons, fake blood or crappy latex masks here. Open up area newspapers or tune on the news. Careful now, here it comes...CONTROVERSY!

The spine tingling face of human ignorance has wielded its bloody hatchet of drooling idiocy once more, leaving those of us with two whole cerebral hemispheres reeling in absolute horror.

The creature in question is the individual who has flooded government offices with the question of (sensitive readers may choose to cover their eyes at this point) “When should we celebrate Halloween? Since October 31st is on a Sunday? Excuse me? Why wouldn’t you celebrate Halloween on a Sunday? Oh, I see Sunday is the Sabbath for Judeo-Christianity, so one shouldn’t celebrate a typically pagan ritual on the Sabbath, Right? If a person’s religious beliefs are such that one finds it offensive to dress up as a devil, monster, spirit or creature of the night on the same day as one chooses to worship one’s god, then don’t. Heck, why stop there? Stop celebrating All-Hallows Eve altogether. It is, after all, rooted in pagan rituals, worship of the dead, and recognition of the deities of harvest. Halloween in America is not the spiritual holiday that it (or variations of it) is in other countries or cultures.

If you wish to not participate, then don’t. But don’t come along and try to ruin my fun or spirituality by imposing your religious belief system on my holidays. I don’t bag on your Christmas, you don’t bag on mine. Time for a nice big bite of a reality sandwich!

By now, no doubt most of you have heard the startling news about the fragments spotted owl. What?! You've been living in a cave for the past eight months and haven't heard? Well, let me clue you in.

After all the commotion Mr. Al Gore and Company raised about saving the spotted owl, it turns out that there is an abundance of spotted owls living peacefully elsewhere in the greater Northwest. (Is it just me, or do you, too, feel misinformed?) This is because the species was placed on the Endangered Species list just when it really wasn't necessary, and that tragedy of errors and losses were lost. Yipes! Common sense and the idea of balance between man's needs and the environment's needs have disappeared.

Let's take a step back from all this and think for a moment. What we have here is overpopulation, created by over-zealous folks, saying that the environment solution to environmental and economic development. Common sense is to be human to humans than we are to other species. With this kind of thinking, however, can we lose thirty thousand jobs to save the owl. Clearly, our priorities are out of order.

Man and the environment can live in harmony. Did you know that reality program. Now I have no problems with seeing both sides of the spectrum, for that matter, all of the spectrum, but originality is in order. I would much rather hear the rantings of a serious neo-nazi fascist than those two ReaganBush spawn spewing their information from some poseur for a president and their compliant parents.

Do us a favor and axe ole Delmar. You Kaunp isn't much better but at least he has a seemingly individualistic point of view with a certain amount of self criticism.

Surprises...good, bad in coverage

Dear Editor,

I must admit I was surprised by a series of articles that appeared in this paper printed in the first month of school. I was especially interested in the story by I. L. Mathews (in the second.) By Jorge Andrade. I believe his work is pertinent and enlightening, especially to people who live as far north in the USA as Boise: who, probably to their own passive ignorance, contribute to the misery and exploitation of our neighbors to the south in much greater depth than anyone realizes or is able to easily admit (or find out, due to the blind- lens imposed by a combination of sensationalist media and the fantasy consumerism that our "great soci- ety" seems to promote.

Then there is the "homecoming issue". It was no surprise to see all the hype around "homecoming" and testosteroned induced excitement and filled with the brim with James Rush and everyone else doing his or her repetitive reactionary garbage. Cami Mills is unimpressed and batman isn’t batman if he is part of a high school yearbook index page writer. Delmar Stolle might as well look for his imaginary Mayberry set- ting in some new fanged virtual

It's time to reassert owl status, priorities

Dear Editor,

As a Boise resident, I have become concerned that the exhibit address the topic of sexual abstention, will find this topic addressed in most of the book brochures and brochures available at the exhibit as well. Mr. Robert Hoover, of Boise, has promised to provide posters and pamphlets, publicizing this message, and I am eager to display them. Finally, I have included in the exhibit advertising the HBO production and THE BAND PLAYED ON. It is not contained in the two-hour continuous play Video Gallery. 3. apologize, if I have missed viewers in this regard.

Debate is brought to my concern by a student at BSU that they were told they couldn’t use the Academic Resource Center in the Pavilion. That student thought it was a privilege for the students to use. I would highly encourage any students that have bad feelings toward abilities to meet the facilities in order that they may meet a fellow student athlete, and realize they are not alone. There are the times which are posted on the campus computer network when these facilities are open for general student use:

Monday–Thursday 8 a.m.–10 p.m.
Friday 8 a.m.–3 p.m.
Saturday closed
Sunday 6 p.m.–10 p.m.

Nothing to be done about fame

I was passing through Boise and read your column complaining about the caliber of the fans at the Alice In Chains show. While I can certainly relate to the feelings you expressed, I'd like you to ease up and put things in perspective.

I've been involved in music, most of which would be considered underground for over 25 years as a fan, and for at least 6 or 7 as a producer at that time. I've seen many bands go from being cult favorites to mass media darlings. It can be a discon- certing feeling when your favorite band's show starts to resemble Grand Central Station overrun by trend-mongering scenesters.

But I spoke of putting things in perspective look at it this way: if a bunch of Alice in Chains fans even long-term, tried and true ones showed up at one of "our" shows, everyone would complain. In fact, more than once I've heard people say, "Oh, the crowds was terrible, a bunch of trendy suburbanites Alice In Chains T-shirts." While in some environments, a band like Alice in Chains might be considered very, very, very, very, very "mainstream," and "sold out." I've been a fan of "independent" rock for five years now and I don't feel comfortable at their shows anymore because there's no point of entry. It's a lot like being part of the ninety percent who live as us, just like your experience with AIC. To pre- serve the potential for finding new heroes. The old ones never last.

YWCA is also good thrift opportunity

Dear Editor,

I would like to add to your "thousands of Boise" a word about the YWCA thrift store at 720 W. Washington. It is open Monday through Friday, 10 to 5, and Saturday 9 to 3. Proceeds from sales go to benefit YWCA programs including the day shelter for the homeless and the women's and children's crisis center. Shopping at the YWCA's thrift store will not only give you a bargain on clothing and small household items, but will also benefit these very important community service programs. And if you are looking for a place to donate clothes or household items you no longer use, the YWCA's thrift store is accepting donations Monday through Saturday at the main desk of the YWCA.

Halloween treats
Boise's full of spooky fun
for a ghoul's night out

Melanie Delon

The stench of scorched pumpkin is in the air, the costumes are created, the candy is gathered and the holiday of All Hallows' Eve is ready for celebration.

For parents looking for a trick-or-treating alternative, check out Student Program Board's kids Halloween party, Nightmare On University Drive.

Nightmare On University Drive carries on the tradition of a safe Halloween activity. SPB is asking parents to accompany children between the ages of 3 and 12 to the event, said SPB Director Melissa Klug.

Kids are sure to be amused by the party, because SPB is centering Nightmare On University Drive around games and activities rather than the normal candy stuff," said Klug.

There will be story-telling, spin art, bean bag games and prize give-aways. Klug said the more important aspect of Nightmare On University Drive is children will have a chance to "interact with other kids" and will steer clear of the routine "candy environment."

Nightmare On University Drive will run from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. in the Jordan Ballroom of the Student Union. Admission is free to everyone.

Boo At The Zoo is another option for concerned parents. Kids accompanied by their parents can enjoy a variety of things. There will be a costume contest, a pumpkin carving contest, people telling Halloween stories, a small spook house and people walking around as costumed characters.

"All the profits from this event goes to the zoo for improvements," said Fort Boise Customer Service Representative Julie Lockey. Admission to the event, which will be held on Oct. 30 from noon to 4 p.m., costs $3 adults, $1.50 seniors, $1.25 for ages four-11 and free for children under three.

If you're out to have some Halloween fun, but aren't in to spending an outrageous amount of money to do it, some local clubs are extending the offer to rage for no great expense.

Klatsch will hold their annual Halloween Costume Party on Oct. 30. The party will feature music by Bill Coffee and Gary Newcomb.

"It's going to be just kind of a big party," said Newcomb.

"We're hoping to see some new faces there," said Coffee. As an incentive to get people to wear costumes, the Klatsch will offer 95 cent draft beers for everyone dressed up. The mayhem will begin at 9 p.m.

Neuroleus will hold their first Halloween bash on Oct. 31 with music by Dirtboy, Tek Tek, Tek and Butterfly Train. All costume wearers will be given a discounted cover charge of $1 and those who stay plain will have to pay $3.

Discounts for costumes will be given on Oct. 30 also with music compliments of El Dope and Big Mudd Wagon. The doors will open at 9 p.m.

Indulge in some safe and inexpensive fun. After all there aren't many times in life when one can be seen publicly dressing as Barney and not be ridiculed.

Not Lisa album Merge is strange, original

Mary Ann Peck

What do you get when you mix two skinheads, one Oklahoma City native, one 1950s greaser wanna-be and one throwback hippie? slammin' drum player, is a original band called For Love Not Lisa.

Their first album was fittingly titled For Love Not Lisa, and their first single is "Softland" from their latest release Merge.

Merge features lyrics which range from strange, such as "She bends right we fear from the consequences we wait/ Somehow outspoken, it hardly leaves you down/ And though we may sympathize, nevertheless we fear it now/ Every notion seems to pull you inside-out.

This album is really important to me, and I hope it's going to mean as much to whoever listens to it," Lewis said. It did for me.

Unlikely of many today's bands, Raine and the Heads go very easy on the approach and their proficiency, which is refreshing. With just a mattering of a few performances throughout the week by recording, we let them imagine run around and get some true. Their music is implicitly angel-sid- den and pleasantly simplistic, there- due to their love for it, rather than the ranks of the truly alternative, or just plain weird. Their message is wildly ambiguous. Two high points come in the sec- ond to last track with a cover of John Denver's "Mountain High," which successfully mixes the charmingly music and feel good riffs with the jagged edge of the дефференциао of grasshopper, square sound. With occasional mega-decibel outbursts, they're like Helmet on speed, aAvCrAl and bizzare, but all-in- all, pleasantly simplistic.

Have you ever wondered what a British band is like? So have I. Engine Kid's new self-titled album comes close to what I believe a true band should be: lively and weird, and serene frightening and bizarre, but all-in- all, enjoyable.

This three member band out of Seattle has conjured an album of con- tradiction: they are either on or they are off--either genuinely pleasant or bang-your-head, crash-your-car, kill-your-neighbor thrash.

You're sitting there on a Thursday night muttering to yourself, "What to do, what to do?" Here's a handy suggestion: Hop on down to the Morrison Center and see a student give a recital, they have crossed the challenge of naming the band. On a night when audience members were asked for their written suggestions all that appeared in the tip jar were condoms, said Coffee. "Maybe they wanted us to call ourselves 'Lifestyles Lubricated,'" said Newcomb.

The light-hearted duo centers on somewhat serious topics which deal with "people." "I used to be in a band in California and I would always write songs about me, or the way I see things," said Coffee. He said now he writes songs from a third person point of view and just basically tells a story.

Coffee said they try to use specifics which lead to broader subjects and he and Newcomb tend to shy away from overly political music. "It's not flag waver music," said Newcomb. "I don't really have a taste for songs that are dated. If I was going to write a political song, I'd probably try to veil it," said Coffee.

Newcomb and Coffee make their live set, veiled and unvelled, regularly at Tom Graneys, Thornton's and the Koffee Klatsch. They will be performing at the Klatsch's Halloween party at 9 p.m. on Oct 30.

Coffee said he hopes the Halloween party will draw in some new faces as well as the regular Klatsch goers. "Come check us out," said Coffee. "We're really good, cute and damn consistent," said Newcomb.

Daugherty building strong hoop program

Scott Gere
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the final installment in a three-part series on BSU's three women head coaches.

Boise State women's basketball coach June Daugherty is pleased with her career so far. "I have the best job in the world," she said.

Daugherty has put together a solid women's basketball program in her tenure at BSU, attaining an effective combination of size and power, as well as backcourt speed and finesse.

The talent-laden Broncos have an All-American candidate in senior center Lidiya Varbanova—who has led the NCAA in field goal percentage for two straight seasons—as well as four All-Big Sky selections last year.

While the team is building impressive win-loss statistics, BSU is gaining some other notable numbers as well.

The Broncos have a 100 percent graduation rate and the team is averaging 2,790 fans per game. Their attendance is ranked 18th in the nation for attendance.

Daugherty has had a good deal of basketball experience. She started her collegiate career as a player at Ohio State, where she helped lead the Buckeyes to the 1978 Big Ten championship.

She has also coached overseas in France and arrived at BSU after serving as an assistant at highly successful Stanford.

And although her resume is lengthy, Daugherty likes to focus on the present.

The Broncos are looking to grab their third straight regular season Big Sky title, and are hoping to finally take home the post-season title and take a trip to the NCAA tournament.

Boise State returns four starters (losing three-point threat April Cline) and take a trip to the NCAA tournament.

Spikers get break from Big Sky play, beat ex-Broncos in alumni game

Layne D. Hansen
Staff Writer

The annual BSU volleyball alumni game last Saturday provided free entertainment for the whole family—as well as a chance to see head coach Darlene Bailey diving and rolling around on the floor. "You always want to include your alumni and it's something you do for fun," Bailey said. "It also gives your varsity another chance to scrimmage—it's one step above a practice."

Bailey looked like she had returned to the form that earned her All-American honors in her playing days. "It was fun to play with them. I coached all those girls," Bailey said.

The newest generation of BSU volleyball players outlasted the old guard, 15-3, 11-15, 15-9, 16-14. The Broncos had the week off from Big Sky Conference play and the alumni game provided a chance for a little relaxation. After 17 matches so far and seven more to go, Bailey is feeling the stress of a volleyball season. "I always feel stress. Coaching is a stressful occupation," she said.

The Broncos are 8-9 overall, but 4-3 in league play, currently one game behind third-place Eastern Washington.

Idaho, which beat the Broncos in three games at home two weeks ago, remains undefeated with a 12-0 record.

Boise State still has a shot at regular-season title, but the Vandals could be tough to catch for the Broncos.

Video games no substitute for real sports

There are a handful of things that can honestly be considered unforgivable. For example, stealing your brother's wife is bad. Beating up puppies is probably worse. Leaving the toilet seat up (according to women) is a sin.

While those things are all terrible, my roommate Adam, did something worse last week. He bought a Sega Genesis.

As if I wasn't already far enough behind in school, I now have something else to waste my time. The Sega—which, I am convinced is a tool of Satan—is more addictive than cigarettes, beer, or Doritos and I am undeniably hooked.

I'm a Bulls vs. Blazers NBA playoffs addict. I need my Tommy Lasorda's bad ball fix. I've gotta have NHL hockey. The Sega has only been turned off long enough to change games, and my thumb is sore from non-stop action. I even get hurt playing video games.

The sports games are the best. You can shoot hoops with Michael Jordan. You can check Wayne Gretzky into the boards. And best of all, you can play an entire game of football and not feel tired.

While the games are fun and all, the concept of just playing sports on television is a little disconcerting.

There are probably thousands of little kids—like myself—sitting in front of the television and playing pretend sports. And that can create problems.

For instance, take the health standpoint. Sports usually lead to exercise, which we all need. As a whole, our nation is filled with overweight people and the flow of adrenaline that comes from live competition. It's impossible to replicate that in a video game.

Roorda takes meet honors

Boise State cross country runner Tom Roorda apparently likes running in Boise. Roorda, a senior, took first place in the Boise XC Open Country Meet last Saturday at Ann Morrison Park.

Roorda edged Richard Brown of Montana State by nine seconds, turning in a time of 25 minutes, 10 seconds in the 8,000 meter race.

Despite Roorda's performance, the Broncos could only manage a third-place finish in the five-team meet.

The women's squad fared much better, tying for second on the road with Ricks College.

Three BSU runners placed in the top 10. Niamh Roorda, a senior, took 18:47.

The women's squad fared much better, tying for second on the road with Ricks College.

Junior Melissa Dahl has been a leader both off and on the court for the Broncos all season and Bailey is looking to her—as well as seniors Kristen Dutto and Teri Johnson—for leadership down the stretch.

“We're looking at the same goals. There have been a lot of excitement all year,” Bailey said.

The team returns to action Thursday when it travels to Northern Arizona followed by a match on the road against Weber State Saturday.

“We're going to find out if we've improved enough to win on the road,” Bailey said.

BSU's going to have to learn to win away from home quick if it was to make the playoffs—five of the final seven games are on the road.

GUILD, and guards Tricia Bader and Angie Evans.

We just have to play up to our potential,” Daugherty said. “If we do, the wins will certainly take care of themselves.”

Like the other two women head coaches at BSU (volleyball coach Darlene Bailey and gymnastics coach Yvonne “Sue” Sandmire) Daugherty has seen a drastic improvement in support and funding for women's athletics. And although women's programs have traditionally lagged behind men's athletics in both budget and following, that may be starting to turn around.

For example, the Big Sky last year decided to ax several football scholarships in an effort to balance the number of scholarships given to women and the number given to men.

There's been a tremendous amount of change,” Daugherty said.

The BSU club baseball team finished with a 3-2 record in a three-game series with Idaho State last weekend.

The two teams played a doubleheader at the Bishop Kelly High School fields on Saturday and played another game Sunday morning. It was the first time BSU had played a club team in the fall rather than the spring.

Idaho State won the first game 1-0, outbilling BSU 5-1.

In the nightcap, the Broncos bounced back with a 7-4 win, collecting eight hits to BSU's seven.

Then in Sunday's game the Bengals thumped Boise State 13-5 in a nine-inning game.

The Broncos will continue to play exhibition games in November in preparation for their spring season which starts Feb. 26 against Idaho.

Scott Samples can check Wayne Gretzky into the boards. And best of all, you can play an entire game of football and not feel tired.

Mayor '93:
The Untold Story

Never let it be said that Todd Sholty was apathetic regarding civic issues. I was recently thrust out of complacency by way of the 1993 mayoral race. Laughingly enough, I was selected by the Statesman to participate in a citizen's panel to discuss the issues that supposedly make up this year's campaign.

Last week, the people from the Statesman arranged a meeting for the citizen's panel to meet the candidates: Tracy Andrus, Brent Coles and Wade Frogley. Michael Hall, the Zoo Guy, didn't show up. That immediately made me want to vote for him, but I refused to commit to any candidate until after I heard them all give their version of why the other candidates are the spawn of Satan.

Wade, Brent and Tracy, otherwise known as the new Mod Squad, entered the room looking like they had just sat through three straight insurance seminars. A series of questions soon followed, and each candidate responded with a well-rehearsed and sterile response, quickly making me very groggy. I wasn't sure, but I thought I saw a few of the reporters going through an Eddie Bauer catalog while the Mod Squad was talking.

If you really don't care about the particulars and are looking for a quick, easy-to-understand and USA Today-esque capsule of the issues and the candidates, here it is (sorry, no pie charts):

The Issues:

- Growth: Boiseans are concerned about the growth of their vegetables. Most gardens are reporting much less squash at a 30 percent less growth rate than last year. Carrots are down 24 percent, and what about gourds? Lest we forget that gourds are down 56 percent? Come on, City Hall, when are you going to wake up and smell the cauliflower?

- Transportation: Citizens have been calling for a North-South corridor for years. For example, here in The Arbiter, our corridor runs East-West, which, as you can tell, has played havoc with the quality of the paper since the late '70s.

- The Police Department: Most Boiseans, including myself, feel that there should be more enforcement of traffic laws. Unless it's me you're pulling over. If that happens, doesn't the police department have better things to do? I think that I speak for all Boiseans when I say, please don't pull me over. Pull someone else over.

- Ganga: Gang activity has recently been given great attention by the Mod Squad, but what about the gangs that have been active in the Boise area for the last 60 years? Of course, I'm talking about Sheeteers. This diabolical star chamber has been torturing this town for too long, not to mention their own families, who suffer shame and ridicule when their dads wear fezzes in public.

- The Mod Squad will spend their last few $1,000 on super-saturated media buys, hoping to sway us to their cause as we watch quality programming like film on Harman's head.

What can we make of all this campaigning? Not much. This campaign reminds me of Kraft Macaroni & Cheese: it's very bland, and when it's all over, you feel like you just ate a shot put. In closing, don't forget to vote, unless you have something really important to do, like flossing your cat.

(Todd Sholty is a humor writer for The Arbiter, unless you don't think this is funny. If that's the case, this is just a very long Letter to the Editor.)
