Students of Boise State University
Groups develop textbook buyback option

BSU students could have an alternative to the BSU Bookstore when it comes time to buy and sell textbooks this fall under a book exchange proposed by the Communication Students Organization and ASBSU.

The organizations will set up a database in which students needing a specific textbook can obtain a list of people selling the book, just as those who want to sell a book can obtain a list of students who need to buy it.

"That way students can make their own deals," ASBSU Treasurer Hayo Bekendam said.

According to ASBSU President CJ Martin, the price will help satisfy what students feel is a great disparity between the buying and selling prices quoted by the BSU Bookstore.

Bekendam attempted an independent flea-market style exchange last year, but it was unsuccessful.

"All past attempts failed for lack of promotion and organization," Bekendam said.

Martin said students had to be present to buy or sell their books last year, whereas the database will match prospective buyers and sellers electronically.

"This one allows people to meet at convenient times," he said.

Martin said a fee of around $.50 would probably be charged for every textbook entered into the database, and about $1.50 to get lists of interested students. The fees would cover the cost of promoting and running the program, he said.

Jim Philpott, CSU public relations officer, said two goals of the program in its first year should be student savings and avenues of accessibility.

"For the first step here we don't want to overextend ourselves," he said.

Martin said the program will be utilized by students if it is promoted well enough.

"I think ... it's something people will want to take advantage of if they know it exists," he said.

Philpott said an alternative to the Bookstore is important to students.

"I think all of us think of these things when we're standing in line ... at the bookstore," he said.

BSU Bookstore Director Bill Barnes said an alternative to the Bookstore is positive for students.

"Anytime someone has more than one choice in anything I think it's good," Barnes said.

According to Martin, the program will be ready Dec. 1, at which time prospective buyers and sellers will be able to enter the texts they have or need into the system.

Library addition faces possible delays while fighting winter

Students can cross their fingers that the Library renovation will be done on time.

Barring delays, the 50,000-square-foot addition to the BSU Library should be completed by February of 1994, said Vic Hosford, university architect.

While the addition is contracted for completion by mid-February, the renovation of the library as a whole will continue for several months.

"The whole interior of the library will be refurbished by the end of the project," Hosford said.

The addition will be used to house books while other portions of the library are under construction.

Completion of the Library addition is scheduled for mid-February.

"The whole key to this thing is the completion of the first phase, which is 50,000 square feet of new building," Hosford said.

The addition was originally slated for completion by mid-January. Because of delays last summer, the completion date was extended by 38 days.

Hosford said the contractors encountered debris such as old automobile frames in the ground.

Behind the competition; Master Sgt. Dennis Neyman, BSU assistant military science professor, was confident.

"We have a good chance of doing well. It will be a good competition and the kids are looking forward to it," he said.

Neyman said the BSU ROTC is an up-and-coming contender among schools in the West.

"Last year we placed fifth and our goal is to place in the top five. All the schools are after us now," Neyman said.

The most grueling part of the competition starts with an all-night patrol and finishes with a 10k run in which competitors wear a backpack.

Neyman said the challenge is both mental and physical, and it takes hard work, determination and, most important, teamwork. He said it not only helps members in their ROTC experience but in their civilian lives as well.

"This builds a lot of teamwork and increases leadership abilities and separates the men from the boys," Neyman said.

After winning the Task Force Basin Ranger Challenge competition for the second year in a row, the BSU Army ROTC Ranger Club attended the annual Brigade Ranger Challenge last weekend in Fort Lewis, Wash.

The competition included ROTC teams from schools across much of the West, the University of Hawaii and the University of Guam. The schools competed in activities such as physical fitness tests, weapons assembly, marksmanship and orienteering.

Before the competition, Master Sgt. Dennis Neyman, BSU assistant military science professor, was confident.

"We have a good chance of doing well. It will be a good competition and the kids are looking forward to it," he said.

Groups move to grade faculty

The BSU administration and a number of student organizations have begun to address the need felt by students to know about their professors before the first few weeks of classes.

According to ASBSU Vice President Brent Hunter, ASBSU has inferred from dating back to the 1970s that shows students want faculty evaluations, and have wanted them for a long time.

"This is not a new issue," Hunter said.

Hunter cited the poll taken recently by Adfis in which 86 percent of the students surveyed wanted access to evaluations.

The most advanced faculty evaluation file to date on the BSU campus was compiled by the Latter-Day Saint Student Organization. According to LDSSA Vice President Holli Dzubak there are almost 900 evaluations on file encompassing over 500 faculty members. Dzubak said about 200 of the evaluations were done at the Oriental Fair and in the SUB earlier this semester. The majority of the evaluations were done by students majoring in the LDS Institute of Religion. ASBSU and LDSSA talked about presenting efforts in providing students with faculty evaluations, but Hunter said ASBSU opted to go even more closely with universality of the evaluations.

"We've decided to focus our efforts on working with the administration," Hunter said.

According to Hunter, BSU President Charles Ruch appointed a committee of students, faculty and staff to decide whether evaluations would be published, and if so, the manner in which the evaluations should be compiled and provided to the students.

"I would expect a recommendation by the committee sometime next semester," Hunter said.

An article on a new child care program in the SPEC in the Nov. 9 issue of the Arbiter were incorrect in two places. First, there was no car involved in the incident. Child Care Connections data base does not list the two year old as 92. McCloskey said the program will utilize the Greenbelt area and develop activities that would be useful to parents, children and teachers.

McCloskey's project seeks to develop, adapt and field test environmental education materials that will help teachers foster an increased environmental awareness among their students.

With the help of fellow educators and scientists, McCloskey hopes to compile written material to accompany school field trips that will be presented by BSU students in the evenings at 6 p.m. Dec. 3-4 in the SPEC.

The program is titled "Beyond the Blackboard," and will feature a variety of original student dances plus live cello and a faculty-choreographed piece by Vivaldi's "Four Seasons."

The event is sponsored by the BSU Theater Arts Department. Tickets cost $4 per admission and $2 for students and seniors at the door.

At-large vote affected by frivolity, humor

Analysis by Jon Wreten
Staff Writer

When only 902 people on a campus with 10,000 students got out and voted for their student government, one must question their motives.

Two weeks ago, ASBSU held its annual at-large election. Nine seats were up for grabs and 14 candidates competed for positions. At-large candidates are elected every fall to provide leadership for the student body at-large, not for particular college or campus activities.

Campaign strategies ranged from using humorous slogans to walking a dog around campus. But for the most part, the winning candidates had one thing in common: vote support from friends and family. "People whose campaign worked usually had support from friends and family," said junior communication major Jim Philpott. Winning candidates Julie Miller, Darrell McLenn and Libby Trowbridge were supported by the Communication Students Organization, Resident Student Hall Association and Non-Traditional Students Association, respectively. Other students thought the campaign that worked usually focused on the issues. BSU student Gary Edwards said Jerry Banks' campaign was one of the most guilty of not sticking to the issues. "He wasn't focusing on any issues. I wasn't focusing on the fact that a university is a place for education and research, not a place to learn how to drink," said Edwards.

Another student said candidates Friday and Jason "Jake" Caufield were guilty of not focusing on issues. Junior John Warfe said the two should have spent more time dealing with the issues, instead of trying to make students laugh. "It really didn't have anything to do with the election. It was just like 'vote for us, we're funny,'" Warfe said.

The election also provided a fine in ASBSU history. For the first time, write-in candidates Dan Guo and Dan McKie, won two senate seats. Two weeks ago, McKie said, "It showed that if a person gets out and talks to enough people, a write-in candidate can win." The two successful candidates used a non-traditional approach to campaigning. "I'm going to win," said Sen. Steve Pilott. Because the ASBSU Senate is unicameral, the Account is just half the battle. The unincorporated will not set out to give anyone a break. "This is a judgment call. We shouldn't have to make all that stuff. We know what they're going to spend all that money on," said Sen. Terry Jones.

"A majority of the people who show up at election time will come away with something they didn't have before," Farnsworth said. "Just because we've always done it in the past doesn't mean we always have to give them the same amount," said Sen. Steve Miller.

CM students take 2nd in Seattle

Four BSU construction management students earned a second-place award in a regional academic competition hosted by the University of Washington in Seattle.

Tim Johnson, Blake Marchand, Edward Cluff and Kornily Kalugen competed against 60 other college students in the Northwest Regional Student Chapter Competition, which was presented with support from the Associated General Contractors. The competition included quantity measurements, cost estimating, chapter presentation and construction materials identification.

The participants also visited two construction sites—a 1916attle bight and Light building renovation and a multi-story office building at the Bellevue and met construction professionals.

Research and Development Program Manager Michael Williams, of Bechtel's Engineering and Construction Technology Group, lectured about "3-D Positioning Data Technology."

Counseling Dept. to offer 4 courses

Learn how to deal with practical problems such as co-dependency, depression, fears and phobias with four courses offered in the Spring by BSU's Counseling Department. The one-credit pass/fail courses are designed to both inform and help students deal more effectively with their concerns. Each course has an enrollment of 15 and will be set up on a presentation/discussion basis to cover academic background and respond to personal needs.

The course descriptions are:

• Depression—This class will focus on the symptoms of and issues associated to depression and the overview of various emotional explanations and treatment strategies.

• Co-dependency: Exploring Boundaries—Set

It was a quiet summer night in Florence, S.C., and 11-year-old Sergio Myers was over at his cousin's house, goofing around on the trampoline in the back yard. "Then all of a sudden we looked up, and a big round object came over the house and just sat there. And I was like 'Whoa!' You know, it was just like blue, blue lights and stuff like that, big long windows in it. It was real weird. I couldn't see nobody in it or nothin'. Then it just like shot straight up and out of there." Myers, now 26 and a communication major at BSU, didn't know it then, but that experience was going to be the first of many unexplained incidents in his life. About six months later something even stranger happened.

Myers was in bed at home when Blackie, the Labrador retriever outside, started howling at his window. Then Lady Bug, the little dog that slept with him, stood up and started barking. "And I looked up and I seen this thing like walk out of my closet and walk to the foot of my bed then it just disappeared," Myers said. Myers said what walked out of his closet was a skinny little man about five feet tall with tan-colored skin. The image is burned into his memory so deeply he can still draw a picture of it. Besides, there have been other visits since then.

Years later, while stationed at Fort Eustus, Va., Myers' little tan man returned. But Myers kept quiet about it, knowing the military's unsympathetic attitude toward those who claim to have seen space aliens. A couple of days after Myers was visited, one of his barracks mates had a similar experience. People who claim to have seen space aliens is welcome to share their experiences in a non-critical environment. At the Organization Fair, 26 people signed up, and the organization's first meeting was encouraging, said Myers.

"I don't feel like I have any privacy. I always feel like somebody's lookin' at me because of that. It's like you can feel it. It's like a ghost-type thing," he said.

The Myerses are writing a book about their experiences. Sergio Myers has also founded a new organization on campus called Believers of the Unknown. Anyone who has had experiences with UFOs and/or extraterrestrials is welcome to share their experiences in a non-critical environment. At the Organization Fair, 26 people signed up, and the organization's first meeting was encouraging, said Myers.

There is 99 percent scam and hoax attached to the UFO phenomenon. So there's good reason for skepticism.

Their next meeting will be Saturday, Dec. 4, in the SUB.

While Myers' story is fascinating, there remains a fair amount of room for skepticism. Critical thinking skills are the

Problems in Russia affect entire world

Jorge Andrade
Staff Writer

What is happening in Russia these days? Do Americans know, or care? Does the United States have any role in Russia's future? In the last few years, the world has witnessed a series of unexpected and dramatic changes in Russia. Whether you followed it through the press or on TV, you know something has changed. What is it? Here are some thoughts from a recent visit to Moscow.

"Russians do not have democracy. They have economic chaos. They are experimenting with capitalism. We should clearly distinguish between capitalism and democracy," Lundy said.

Throughout the 20th century, Russia has been the center of attention for historians and political and religious leaders around the world. Lundy referred to the Soviet Revolution of 1917 and the current state in Russia initiated under former Soviet Union leader Mikhail Gorbachev, as two of the most noteworthy examples of social change in the 20th century.

"Russia is a theme that has to be in our minds as students," Staff Writer A.J. Maxymillian said. Student Ann H. Guttering said in an interview conducted over Internet, "Russia is a theme that has to be in our minds as students."

Guttering, who returned from St. Petersburg, Russia in August, said the size of the country and its unique problems should incite awareness from around the world. "Russia covers 11 time zones, and they cannot afford spare parts for their nuclear power stations," she said.

Guttering said the economic and political situations are catastrophic. "Inflation is apocalyptic. People there read that what they are currently going through is called 'democratic reform,'" she said, but shortages, inflation and transportation crises make Russians skeptical of the supposed reform.

"It leads them to say, 'if this is democracy, we don't want it,'" she said. Student Melissa Witham lived in Russia for two years before she returned to the United States in 1992. "Overall, Internet she said the situation is very confusing to Russians. "People are passive about their own country and craving all things Western. It is not democracy by any means," she said. Student Jennifer Bantner was in St. Petersburg and Moscow last spring. Over Internet she said Russians have ceased to trust leaders. "People have a very negative attitude about politicians, from Lenin to Yeltsin. It does not seem to matter who runs the country, their lives are still very hard," Bantner said.

Despite the economic strife suffered by Russia, Guttering said the true crisis lies in the spirituality of the people. "Russia is a nation that bases itself in spiritual roots. This is not meant in an exclusively religious light. The present day problems are of course material, but the real and underlying crisis is spiritual," she said.

"They need a sense of spiritual union in order to feel attached and functional as a people. They feel they have nothing—no nation, no future, no money, no hope," Guttering said.

Although the opening of Russia has meant the invasion of religious missions from the United States and other parts of the world, Lundy said the Russian Orthodox Church now has a high profile in Russia. "They are dealing with the hungry, the homeless, the folks who need clothes. There is a price to pay for it," she said.

Lundy said the United States will support Yeltsin as long he supports American investors who use Russian resources for profit. "It has nothing to do with democracy. It has to do with capitalism," she said.

Lundy said the world's largest forest is in Siberia. It recycles more oxygen than any other forest in the world. She said American students should be aware of the danger of not conserving the woodlands. "The United States will support Yeltsin as long as he does not a surprise to Lundy. "America does not want to support Yeltsin after he dismissed the parliament. But American support is not a surprise to Lundy. "We support him and like him. We are not paying money for protection and we are not paying money for clothes. We are paying money for education but of aviation, that it has all but supplanted the original heritage, not of education but of aviation, that existed on the universities campuses in 50 years. What is now BSU was, until 1939, Booth Field, Boise's first commercial airport. Prior to the construction of Booth Field, civil aircraft operated out of the Boise fairgrounds while military planes used the parade grounds as an airfield. The only dedicated airfield at the time was Barker Field, a private strip near the Whitney Contract Airmail Five, or CAM-5, a Pasco-Boise-Elko airmail route that changed Boise proposed airfield from a luxury to a necessity. A site had to be settled on and the land bought as soon as possible.

The new site was selected as a stretch of bottomland west of Broadway Avenue, a part of which the city already owns and used as a dump. The rest of the land, known as the Booth Tract, after its owner, was purchased with the project's budget, leaving no funds to clear the dense and rocky land for construction.

The American Legion at the time had long been advocates of an airport in Boise and had mediated the negotiations between Varney Airlines (the owners of CAM-5) and the city. They addressed the plight by leading troops of volunteers to clear and grade the property, advancing westward from Broadway. In typical fashion, the entire Boise government created a bond election in 1930, how ever, Congress approved federal aviation subsidies. Varney Airlines was purchased by United Airlines. The federal funds were used to establish passenger service to the Northwest and see the conglomerate return as United Airlines. Boise had again outgrown its aviation facility capacity. A bond election in 1930 allowed the city to expand the runway, and in 1931 United built a new terminal on the present site of Bronco Stadium. The terminal was open on both ends, allowing aircraft to pass through while loading and unloading passengers on the way. The first of its kind in the nation and soon became the industry standard with open hangar doors, it was in the airports across the country.

Air Guard offers training, excitement...and cash

Dawn Kramer
Editor-in-chief

Some students sleep on the weekend, some work and some study but there are also several BSU students who spend their weekend waiting for the enemy to attack in the Idaho desert.

These students are studying tactical manuevers and first aid rather than English and math. They are in the Idaho Air National Guard.

It's not a real battle, but they do bring out all the toys for the occasion. Imagine spending a weekend flying around in an $8 million death machine.

Several BSU students spent last weekend training with Apache attack helicopters near Mountain Home. The mission was to destroy the hypothetical enemy's radar near Mountain Home.

The mission was part of a training program which will prepare them for certification training at Fort Hood, Texas next summer.

Certification will enable them to take part in actual combat.

During the period of the construction of Whitney Field, the city consolidated Booth Field and the rest of its adjoining property to be set aside as the site of Boise Junior College. In 1959 the city sold the land to BJC for $1.

Nothing remains of Booth Field except what is in photographs and stories, but by nature an airport leaves little to preserve. The original hangars at University and Euclid served as the vocational education shops for BJC until they were demolished to make room for the current Boise Tech Complex in the 1960s.

The Administration Building, still in use, and the Assembly Hall (now the Hemingway Western Studies Center) were the first campus buildings, and were erected on the runaway.

The old United terminal, the acknowledged pioneer of its kind, served proudly through expansions until the 1980s when it was finally absorbed into what is now Boise Air Terminal.

A heritage of aviation was built on the site of BSU in the pioneer spirit of Idaho, a heritage that relocated itself in prewar expansion, making room for a new tradition of education. As BJC expands toward the future in the same pioneer spirit, students and faculty alike hope to have the toys they do bring out to destroy the hypothetical enemy to attack in the Idaho desert.

Whether their main motivation is money or career, there is no denying that they get to spend a few weekends a year playing with some of the most intricate and fascinating equipment in the world. That's reason enough for some.

A UH 60 Blackhawk helicopter rises above a camouflage tent at Edwards.

So, if they aren't qualified to operate the hard-core machines like the Apache and they have to spend a weekend freezing, why do these students do it? The most common reason is money.

Spc. Tom Mort is a junior pre-architecture major. He is an avionics mechanic for the National Guard. He has been in the Guard for two and a half years.

"The only reason I went into the practice mission was [to pay] for school," Mort said.

Each of the students is on a different program which helps them with their school bills.

Spc. James Shepard is a sophomore business major who is a driver and radio operator. He is also involved in ROTC. He said he joined not just for the money but because, "I always wanted to be a soldier." He plans to continue with the military after graduating from BSU.

Spc. Jeremy Spizer is a senior communication major who has been with the Guard for five years. He is a flat operator, which means he works with air traffic control.

ing, the contractors fully excavated the area and refilled it with material they hauled in. That set the project behind 31 days.

Construction was further delayed when the remodeling of the old library began. Floor tiles made of asbestos required special handling for which the contractors had not allowed time, setting the contractors back another seven days.

The delays happened early last summer, however, and the contractors have had no further delays since then.

"Once they got out of the ground, they've been right on schedule," Hosford said. But the anticipated harsh winter could pose a problem, Hosford said. If the weather becomes extremely severe, the contractors may have to shut down.

"We [might not] be done until the middle of March," Hosford said. According to Hosford the mortar that holds the bricks together must not freeze as it dries, or it loses its strength. But the contractors can work in mildly cold weather with a few adjustments to prevent the mortar from freezing.

"They could cover and heat the area in which they lay brick," Hosford said. While working on the inside of the addition, the contractors will bring in a gas line and set up a furnace for heat. Hosford said bad weather will not delay the renovation of the library's interior.

"The construction work will be ongoing inside the building," he said.

Tim Brown, university librarian, said using the library while renovating presents practical problems. Dirt in the air system has been difficult to eradicate, and maintaining the heating system is also tricky.

"This is an immense undertaking," he said.

Book collections will have to be moved several times during the construction, creating extra work and confusion for students, faculty and staff.

"I know that we will face a lot of hassle," he said. Brown said he would feel better if he knew the construction could continue on schedule.

"I don't think there's a firm date for completion. That makes me nervous," he said.

Promises will not be forgotten

Like all politicians, ABSUU Senate candidates made lots of promises to extract votes from their constituents. (And, as usual, the fulfillment of many of these promises lies beyond the power of ABSUU.) So to remind those newly elected of their obligations, and to let them know that we're paying attention, we have compiled all the recently elected ABSUU Senators' campaign promises.

Tim Helgerson said he wanted instructor accountability, student reviews available and material/book costs listed for different classes for preregistration, corporate sponsors to pay for parking facility construction, an increase in registration hours and to have monitors in the Administration Building to post closed class dates.

Dan Gus wanted food prices in the SUB to go down, touch-tone registration, support for the BUS system, higher admission standards and increased funding for new classrooms.

Bob McKie wanted to repeal the parking restrictions in Julia Davis Park, an enrollment cap, more funding from the state and to hold touch-tone registration, support for the BUS system, higher admission standards and increased funding for new classrooms.

Mari Duvall wanted to support a multipurpose building and better safety.

Brett Paternoster wanted to expand the BUS system, institute an enrollment cap, continue to allow bicycles and expand student awareness of teacher evaluations.

Jerry Banks wanted more parking, alcohol at tailgate parties, better daycare, improved recycling and improved weight training facilities for non-athletes.

Dannii McIn was wanted to institute environmental awareness, phone registration, make the financial aid process faster, more parking, a bicycle dismount policy and easing of the alcohol ban for adults.

Julie Miller wanted better parking, discontinuation of the shuttle to use funds for a parking structure, a bicycle dismount policy and easing of the alcohol ban for adults.

The Founding Fathers gave us the rights to “life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness,” and later the Bill of Rights and other subsequent amendments further defined our basic rights. We enjoy freedoms of religion, bearing arms, of speech and press and the freedom to peaceably assemble. Slavery no longer exists, and criminals even have protection under the Constitution. These are basic freedoms we hold to be inherent in our society.

The great thing about America is its diversity. Our different opinions highlight our freedom. This includes equal consideration for all ideas. This includes equal consideration for decent and moral ideas as well as the ones that run extremely counter to them. Equal consideration for both sides must occur in order for a right to be a true right. A fine line exists between the two, however, and when that is crossed, an excess of special rights exists.

Bruised Broncos take fun out of football

"Nuff said on BSU's impressive record. I'm not a football analyst, nor am I all that interested in football. What I DO know, though, is that when one team is in the lead and the other team, it loses the game. If this does severely embarrass them, then enough then it ceases to be a whole lot of fun for the spectators. Our team looks at the tv, the game isn't technically over, but you'll just have to wonder if they stick around for the after-game entertainment."

And the fun continues...

Candidate says thanks

Dear Editor,

Well, we lost! Together we accumulated less than 8 percent of the vote but, we still had fun and learned a lot. First we'd like to thank all the people who voted for us for showing support for us even after reading the truth. We have to thank all the 120 people that signed our petition and actually gave us a chance to be in the Senate. The campaign with nothing, the people and Tiffany Birch (OHand Travis for help).

Fourthly, Chris Fyan, our campaign manager who put in more time than anyone else to take pictures, make up posters, and make sure we were grammatically correct with every single word. Every campaign needs an Livie Ridge, the nice lady who helped us out on the computers when Chris wasn't available. Finally, Jason Friday, Connie McWitt, and Tiffany Barx for helping us with nothing, these were the people who lost their finger prints from ripping tape off of the bulletin board.

Sixthly, the great people from BSU academics, Kelly Walton and Lon Mabon would come out of the closet as partners and teach peace and tolerance and we could get really great bottled beer taste in a can. Now wouldn't that be a charming way of expressing themselves proud men onto the gridiron, only to come back broken and beaten, Polvok could kick back for a year and train in secret for the next year—cre- ative team. Which would you like? Join for the new world.

Yeah, right. The only drawback that I can see is that BSU football, no matter how crummy it turns out, is a money spinner. The foot- ball/athletic department brings a large amount of money into the university—money that eventually finds its way into areas that benefit all the stu- dents.

Yes, does this say anything about our future? We will see. But we would rather pump a lot of money into our football team just so that people will come to BSU and bring money into academic programs? Because people don't show up by the thousands to the wall to take a look at the campaign manager. Did you see it?

And the fun continues...

New policy for Letters to Editor

The Editor thanks all those wonderful folks who have sent us Letters to the Editor. (Jon is especially happy because he loves to get mail). Unfortunately, the unprecedented verbosity of the student body has forces us to change our policy and letters may now not exceed 200 words. This policy will allow us to print letters in a more timely fash- ion, and will also provide letter writers with an opportunity to practice writing concisely. (Remember: If you don't cut your letter down to 200 words, Jon will)

Child care cleared up

Dear Editor,

The article on page 2 of the November 9th issue where the Writer regarding child care was misleading. Child Care Connections (CCC) provides a variety of services for the community and its child care providers, such as training for the child care providers, financial assistance to low-income families for child care, child care referrals and for the community and corpo- rate employees.

Federal child care reimbursement is significant (5-10% of child care costs) is available to help all families who are striv- ing to become self sufficient through train- ing or working. Eligible parents need to go to CCC's office at 505 North Cole Road for instructions on how to apply. Child care referrals can be obtained by making an appointment with CCC at 352-6403 (Monday through Friday 9-4:30 on of)

Just to be clear, we have never asked anyone to provide child care on a voluntary basis.

Parking problem probed

Dear Editor,

The Association for Nontraditional Students/Senate Watch Committee would like to thank Professor Protein C. Martin and the Senate for giv- ing us the opportunity to be heard on the parking permit issue. The Senate Watch Committee applauds ASBSU for their efforts in looking into other areas as well in the ever growing problem of parking.

This effort of looking into other alterna- tives for the parking problems shows A.T.S., the Senate Watch Committee and others that ASBSU is aware and willing to listen and work with and for all the students of Boise State University.

Energy of live jams fuels Boise’s Midline

Melanie Delon-Johnson
Culture Editor

They have energy, talent and dedication, and according to Vocalist Anthony Fagiano, they do the “greatest thing in the world” — play live.

They’re Midline, and they are “rock ’n’ roll for the 90’s,” said Bassist Alfred Varona. Unlike the bevy of young alternative musicians, Midline concentrates on putting out a good hard rock sound which they can give to audiences.

“They’re the only band in town with their own light show,” said Fagiano’s manager, Weez. The light show helps Midline meet their goal of giving audiences a “full package.”

“Our first gig was at The Grove,” said Fagiano. The quartet was serious from the beginning, pooling all their money to get the lights and the right sound equipment to attract a crowd.

They did and have continued gigging in Boise and surrounding areas for the past three years.

“We wrote five songs and thought we were rock stars,” said Guitarist Scott Elliott. However, according to Fagiano, Midline has “finally got all the gear” and experience to start looking ahead to the big time. Midline practices six nights a week and tapes all of their live performances for critical evaluation. Their biggest concern is not only the look of their show, but the sound of their music. “You can hear every guitar riff, you can hear every drum beat and you can understand every lyric [Fagiano] is singing,” said Drummer John Conely.

Midline has been scheduled to perform at Pirate Radio’s New Year’s Eve party, but until then, Varona encourages everyone to “support the local scene.”

Midline will put their music on tape for a self-titled debut due out around Christmas/early January.

“We’re going to play a gig in Weiser this weekend, just so they’ll have a chance to hear our music,” said Elliott. Right now, simply being heard by audiences is one of Midline’s biggest goals.

“We circulate close to 500 to 1,000 flyers per gig,” said Conely, “Midline doesn’t care who gets the gig, just who draws the crowd. Although Midline likes the crowds, Conely said they’re more of a “concert band than a bar band,” and prefer doing originals.

Midline’s music has been featured on the Sunday night local music show, but will be put on regular rotation on Pirate Radio Power 100, pending their new record deal.

Midline has also been returning to classic packaging

Mystery surrounds ’94 offering

The return of the box seems to be the mysterious theme cold drill Graduate Editor Barbara Halp ink has been keeping quiet. The box, each containing different graphical covers, will all be placed in a resealable box package and sold at the BSU Bookstore, hopefully at the beginning of March, said Harvey.

The theme for this year is anything which will appeal to Idahoans. So far, cold drill has received 230 entries, but before the Dec. 3 deadline is up, they expect 300 to 400 entries.

When an entry is sent in, the piece is read by a panel of four, and has to receive a unanimous vote in order to make it in the magazine.

“The pieces we have accepted have been extraordinary,” said Harvey. The Boise community has brought in several artists, Weez. The light show, which has been extraordinary,” said Harvey. She describes these as poems which deal with “airy, lofty subjects or are down to earth.”

For ever, those who wish to submit something different are welcome.

“Nothing’s too off the wall,” said Harvey. cold drill originated in the 1970s and since has gained several awards to its credit. The awards are on display on the first floor of the Liberal Arts Building. Some of them include honors given by the Columbia Scholastic Press Association at Columbia University, the Coordinating Council of Literary Magazines in New York City and the University & College Designers’ Association.

Harvey attributes one of the award-winning factors to the anonymity of the selection process. Only Harvey knows the name of the person until after the piece is chosen for publication.

This year’s mysterious revival of the box, combined with the pile of entered pieces and entries, will be the foundation for future awards of excellence for 1993—94’s cold drill.
Harvey hits heavy messages in Demos

Sean Lee Brandt
Staff Writer

Get angry! Stand up and scream until your lungs are raw and you are spitting blood. Feel better? No? Well then, just sit yourself down and pop in the latest CD by PJ Harvey titled 4-Track Demos.

Ms. Harvey (no relation to the rabbit) demands you stand up and pay attention to the world around you. She takes you on a ride through the twisted social dogmas which allow women to be treated like objects and playing fields.

Harvey is mango torqued and it comes shining through in her style of music. At first listen I was taken aback just a tad. The emotion in songs like "Rid of Me" and "Snake" hit you like a vocal baseball bat in the back of your head. "Rub 'Til It Bleeds" and "Hook" grab you and shake you senseless.

Don't be mistaken, this disk is definitely not for the weak of heart and soft of spine. Harvey takes the soft, subtle images of life around all of us, tempers them and loads them into an acoustical shotgun which rips through our gut and leaves us spilling our stereotypes and disillusion onto the dirty street.

I really, truly enjoyed the hell out of this CD! Loud, angry music which says something about life and is not for everyone, is a welcome respite from the pabulum of perfect love and shiny, breezy crap invading the airwaves!

Debut offers something new

The five man whirlwind of talent which makes up Possum Dixon has gone through more phases of the world with their first full length self-titled silverdisk.

The band resembles the group of computer geeks that used to hang out in the corner of the lunchroom, playing "Space Invaders" on a scientific calculator. "None of us were the high school quarterback, but all of us want attention," says Vocalist/Bassist Rob Zabrecky.

And attention they are sure to get! Having taken their name from fugitive killer James "Possum" Dixon, the band deploys satiric vocals in such songs as "Nerves" and "John Struck Lucky."

The best way to describe them is as a sort of modern Buddy Holly/Violent Femmes/10,000 Maniacs combination, with just enough order to keep the whole ball of wax from consuming itself.

"Executive Slackers," the band comments on its intense desire to never become a part of the corporate machine which spits out yesterday's hot band and searches for the nextfad du jour.

With guitarists Robert O'Sullivan and Celso Chavez and drummer Richard Tressel, Zabrecky leads the listener through a set of lyrics which are sometimes dreamy and lilting, sometimes pounding and other times, little more than singsong commentary. The whole experience is greatly akin to having an orgasm or experiencing a train wreck. I know it was good for me; now it is your turn to take the leap.

 Hungary yields talented music recruit to BSU

Mary Ann Peck
Staff Writer

A musically gifted Hungarian student so impressed BSU music Professor Madeleine Hsu that when she discovered his talent, she arranged for him to study music at BSU.

This student is Janos Kery, 19, the son of Mihali and Maria Kery, two music teachers in Hungary. Kery is a freshman, but in a 400 level piano class.

He has been playing piano for 12 years.

Kery said he wanted to start on the trombone "because it was so big and so loud," but was only 7 years old and not big enough to play. So, his parents started him on piano. Kery attended an elementary school and music became his most important subject.

One can be easily amazed when watching Kery play. He uses no music sheets, has his eyes closed and his hands fly with the grace of a flock of butterflies. It is as though the music consumes every part of his soul.

"The main idea of the music is to give yourself and your feelings because if you just play music, it is boring," said Kery. "Music is another form of language everywhere. You can't be a human being; feelings are the same." Kery has many interests including math, literature, art, science and history.

"Unfortunately, I do not have time to do all of these a lot, because music takes so much time," said Kery.

Hsu attended a language seminar in Hungary when he heard him practicing the piano. Hsu then arranged to get sponsors for Kery and sold many of her own recordings to raise the money to get him here.

"He is very intelligent, a brilliant pianist, has a wonderful personality and lots of potential," said Hsu.

Kery also composes music. Some of his original pieces can be heard in several of his performances scheduled throughout the year.

All musical performances by students are listed under "recitals" in the Liner Notes.

Adoption strengthens stepfamily ties

My adoption didn’t seem as simple because of my biological father. Despite the fact I’m 20 years old, there still was a question of obtaining consent from him. Our attorney said my biological father might have to be notified for approval despite his record of parental neglect. Fortunately, we were able to follow through with the adoption because I am an adult.

In the court hearing, my siblings and I were asked about why we wanted to be adopted by our stepfather. After only minutes of testimony, the order was granted.

The adoption of children by a stepparent, mainly stepheathers, has become a great, and common way to make a family complete. It’s somewhat of a tragic situation when fathers, or mothers, won’t follow through with their parental duties, but the ability of stepparents to take a full and legal part in the rearing of their new child is a tremendous bonding experience.

This new practice of adoption has become one of the most popular forms of adoption in recent years, but it doesn’t go without its flaws. The adoption laws can make situations difficult, as they vary from state to state. There are also the rights of the other parent. In my case, my biological father couldn’t contest my adoption, because I am an adult, but he could have contested it if that was the order. If the other parent does contest an adoption, it can take years to fulfill the adoption wish. In order to overturn a contested adoption, family members, especially children, will have to go through numerous court hearings, painful testiﬁces, and have to prove the other parent’s negligence.

I guess, my case was a lucky one. It took us three to four months to get our hearing; all of the paperwork comes out properly, our attorney should be able to ﬁnalize it Dec. 20.

Despite the hard work, effort and frustration posed, adoption is a great thing. It gives stepparents and children a sense of being wanted byed someone. Although most of the adoption cases featured in the media aren’t positive, adoption still remains to be one of the best forms of making a complete family in today’s society.

Vandals dominate Broncos again

Mark E. Woodall
Staff Writer

For just a little while in last Saturday's Boise State-Idaho football game, there was a glimmer of hope for Broncos fans. After 11 years of losing to Idaho, Boise State was hanging with the Vandals, intra-state rivals and a top-10 team. For just a little while in last Saturday's BSU-Idaho football game, "..." An experienced Idaho football team beat the younger, more inexperienced Broncos 49-16 in Moscow to end a disappointing 1993 season for Boise State. The game also extended the Vandals' winning streak over BSU to 12 straight years. "I think the effort was good, but I think we've gotta make plays," BSU head coach Pokey Allen said in a postgame television interview. "We had a lot of chances to make plays." The Broncos closed the season 3-8 and 1-6 in the Big Sky Conference. The playoff-bound Vandals (9-2), ranked 11th in I-AA play did not start off the game like a top-10 team. The Boise State offense, starting from their own 20, drove all the way to the Vandal 17 on the opening drive and had to settle for a 34-yard Greg Erickson field goal and an early 3-0 lead. On Idaho's first play of the game running back Sherriden Malm fumbled after a hit by nose tackle Kimo von Oelhoffen and linebacker Eric Escandón recovered the ball on the Vandal 12. Boise State couldn't convert on the Idaho miscue, however, and led only 3-0 after being inside the Vandal 20-yard line twice. Not being able to take advantage of the scoring opportunities left the door open for the Idaho defense. Idaho scored two touchdowns, including a 10-yard strike from senior quarterback Doug Nussmeier to tight end Paul Burke, before the Broncos could score again. Boise State scored after a well-executed 74-yard drive when quarterback Tony Hilde found tight end Nick Leonard in the end zone, but fumbled 14-9 after a bad snap resulted in a missed point after attempt. Idaho ended the scoring in the first half when running back Jost Thomas scored on a 44-yard run to put the Vandals up 29-0, and proved...

Boise State set to defend Big Sky crown

Scott Samples

Last year the BSU men's basketball team had a new look to it when the season began, as it only had four returning players. This year's team has a similar look, as only five returning players have returned to the squad. But even with the faciltiy last season, BSU went 10-4 in the Big Sky Conference, was 21-8 overall, won the Big Sky title and went on to the NCAA championships. This year the Broncos are hoping for a repeat performance. But it's going to be a difficult task. Boise State lost first team all-conference center Tanaka Board, the school's all-time leading scorer, to graduation. It lost point guard Darnell Woods and forward Sherman Morris—key figures in last year's success—to academic ineligibility. This season BSU returns four players from last year's squad who were strong contributors: senior forward Shamburger Williams (7.5 points a game, 5.4 rebounds), senior forward Eric Bellamy (3.2 points, 3.4 rebounds), junior center John Coker (6.7 points, 3.9 rebounds) and sophomore guard Damon Archibald (6 points, 1.7 assists). Last week the Broncos finally got a chance to put their skills to the test when they played a pair of exhibition games against High-Five America and the Okanagan All-Stars.

The BSU volleyball team clinched a spot in the Big Sky Conference tournament this week when they upset Eastern Washington last Friday.

Led by Melissa Dahl, Kristen Dutto and Crystal Carr—a trio that has played well the last half of the season—the Broncos knocked off the Eagles 15-7, 15-8, 14-16, 16-14.

Dahl led the team with 17 kills and 11 digs, Dutto notched 16 kills and nine blocks, and Carr added 13 kills and 11 digs.

Despite suffering from the flu, freshman Caryndi Nece continued to direct the offense and set the setter position, notching 39 assists, 33 digs and five blocks.

The Boise State volleyball team went to the big show—the NCAA tournament Friday.

Talented Bronco squad looks for conference title

Scott Samples
Sports Editor

If everything goes the way people around the league are predicting, this could be the year the BSU women's basketball team goes to the big show—the NCAA tournament. After going 19-8 last season and taking third in the Big Sky Conference, the Broncos return five starters, including senior All-American candidate Liidya Varbanova.

As a result, Boise State—along with last year's conference champion, Montana—has been tagged as the Big Sky favorite. But the Broncos would like to go beyond a conference title.

"That's our goal, definitely," Varbanova said. "I believe we have the talent to get further than just going to the NCAA, but it takes more than talent." Still, talent can go a long way and the Broncos are long on talent. Varbanova averaged 17.8 points and 8.2 rebounds a game last season at BSU's starting center.

Junior guard Tricia Bader averaged 11.3 points and 4.7 assists and senior

Losing to hated rivals a painful tradition

As I watched the end of the Idaho-BSU contest last Saturday, I wasn't surprised that Idaho had manhandled the Broncos by 33 points.

You see, I've cursed them, you know, on purpose, mind you, but I have indeed cursed the BSU football program, at least against intra-state rival Idaho.

It's something I wanted to do, it's just something that happens. I have an uncanny ability to cause teams to lose every year while I'm at that school and a couple years beyond. It all began back in my high school in Alaska. My team, the Kenai Kardinals (you'll notice the clever way we spelled the name of our school—a bird that has never set foot in the state) lost to the Soldotna Stars for 15 years before we finally beat them on the most important varsity level last year. I was on two of those losing squads. My senior year we enjoyed losing to the bastards so much we lost to them twice in the same season, including the conference championship.

I know all about losing to people you hate. I know all about people ridiculing you while you played well. Bailey said, "They made a number of errors while we played well"

In the current year's tournament, the weary Broncos will face the host Vandals in the first round of the four-game season, single-elimination tournament.

Northern Arizona, which placed second in the conference, will take on Montana, which finished third, in the first game. To have a chance of winning, Bailey says the team has to rest and regroup.

"We haven't taken a game from Idaho yet," Bailey said. "We have got to get healthy. We need seven or eight players to be feeling alright."

If the Vandals end the Broncos' year next week, Bailey said she wouldn't be disappointed about the season.

"I'm really proud of the team," she said. "Our season has run true to form for a lot of young players. We have had a lot of growth with our young players this season."

Bailey also feels the team's only two seniors, Dutto and Johnson, have done a good job of setting the example for their teammates.

"I believe we were a veteran team and I believe our veterans are setting the tone and keeping things moving along," she said.

I believe we were a veteran team and I believe our veterans are setting the tone and keeping things moving along.

— June Daugherity, BSU women's basketball coach

But the Broncos pulled down a whopping 65 boards, had 11 steals and caused 24 TOs.

Evans led BSU with 18 points, sophomore center Kenia Nussmeier added 13, while Sower pulled down 16 boards and Varbanova 10.

Still, it's early in the year and tough to tell how the team is going to fare. "I think early is a good word. Only having five practices, it makes you a little anxious as a coach," Daugherity said. "From a coaching standpoint, we're a little anxious because you're not sure you've had enough time to teach your players as students of the game."
Brady Bill: Friend or Foe?

The Brady Bill has recently passed through the U.S. Senate, and as a public service, I have put together some of the arguments for and against this legislation.

Remember, The Arbiter will not be held responsible for the endorsement that I give for or against the Brady Bill, but they will be held responsible for any injury that you suffered at no fault of your own. Are you drowning in medical bills? Call Schmeckman, Glick, and Schmeckman at 1-800-SUE THEM. "Remember, don't be a schmuck, man, get Schmeckman."

Back to the Brady Bill. In case you’ve been too busy watching JFK: His Secret Passion for Scrabble this week on television like myself, I’ll fill you in: The Brady Bill is legislation that will make it illegal for superstations such as WTBS, WGN, and the Lint Channel to broadcast reruns of The Brady Bunch without a five-day waiting period. During this waiting period, Howard Stern and other FCC representatives will check each individual station’s application for reruns and fragmented sentences.

Most members of Congress that opposed this bill did so for two reasons: First, they felt that every American has an inalienable right to watch the Bradys in the privacy of their own rec. room; and (b), where does this madness stop? After we regulate the viewing of the Brady Bunch, what’s next? No more A Very Brady Christmas? What do we tell the innocent children who will no longer be able to enjoy watching television’s first dysfunctional family (if you don’t count My Mother, the Car)? That "something suddenly came up?"

The Pro-Brady Bill crowd includes a mass contingent of authors who feel this program is not representative of today’s America. These are the people who have written books such as The Co-Dependent’s Guide to New Age Transmission Repair, What to Name Your Crystal, and Claiming Your Inner Child as a Dependent (An important difference—an “inner child” gives someone the right to call in sick to work and watch game shows all day. An “outer child” is when Charles Manson told the judge that the Beatles made him do it). When the Brady Bill is signed by President Clinton, all the Bradys will be in attendance, except for Marcia (Maeve McCormick), who is currently doing dinner theater in Lubbock, Texas, where you can see her in her one-woman tribute to Dr. Renee Richards, entitled, I Am Woman. Also, Sam the Butcher will not be in attendance, due to his untimely death last year. All over the country, butchers will be mourning Sam by selling head cheese at 35 percent off.

Todd Sholty is a columnist for The Arbiter, as well as an avid collector of Brady albums, including a rare signed copy of The Brady's Sing the Best of England Dan and John Ford Coley.
