PULLING ROOTS... PLANTING SEEDS

Broadening horizons

DAN SKINNER
Environmental Editor

Some folks like to broaden their horizons while others go walk about places untouched by the mechanical world. Larry Tuttle of Portland, Ore. is doing all of this and more in his "March for Reform" of the 1872 Mining Act.

Tuttle is walking from Salem, Ore. to Denver, Colo. in the period of six months. He recently strolled through Boise in the midst of the second leg of his trip. He will travel from Boise to Missoula, through Wyoming and then into Denver. It is not a coincidence the trip is 1,872 miles long.

The Center for Environmental Equity, of which Tuttle is the president, is coordinating the trip.

Tuttle said he constantly asks himself why people are not outraged by the amount of subsidized destruction of wild places, natural diversity and clean water. The trip focuses on the Mining Law, although Tuttle did speak of logging as another example of corporate welfare.

The Mining Law is a holdover from the days of manifest destiny and Westward migration. The law was initially intended to lure people from the East. Now, it lures corporations to the Far North. Regardless of whether the person or company staking a claim on federal land is American (the major mining conglomerates are Canadian), the cost for development and virtual ownership (patent) of the mining claim is a pittance $2.50 to $5 per acre.

Recently, a Canadian state was assessed at $127 for a Montana claim that is valued at over $15 million. Under the law, there is no royalty or fee system which addresses the amount of money raised from the sale of minerals. The miners get rich and taxpayers and the environment are neglected.

The secretary of the interior cannot deny a permit for a body designed or mine. There are no environmental provisions in the 1872 Mining Law. Reclamation of mining claims is a major concern. Currently, there are more than 550,000 abandoned mine sites in the United States with over 10,000 miles of polluted streams beneath them. The Coeur d'Alene lake watershed is virtually dead. Currently, estimates have reached billions of dollars to attempt rehabilitation of the heavy metal laden area. Although corporations claim reclamation is possible, it is hard to imagine how successful this may be considering the mining process.

Finishing up the trip, Tuttle is seeking for the sake of the West to destroy the mining law. Tuttle said he is walking for "corporate welfare of mining operations is ended."

Larry Craig is currently working on a rewrite of the Mining Law of 1872. Craig’s bill will grant 3 percent of net proceeds after profits to the government. His bill would retain much of the existing law such as the fair market value for the surface value only. The secretary of the interior has no authority to deny a permit. There is no suitability review process.

As far as reclamation, Craig’s bill would only require "the extent economically and technically possible." The cost may go up a bit for the miners, but the process will change very little. It only ensures the right of corporations to continue to mine public land with little or no environmental safeguards.

State laws address some of these issues, but they are not standardized and generally not strong enough to mandate change of the Mining Law of 1872.

Tuttle goes so far as to say “the bottom line is there are no federal standards on federal lands that they have to adhere to.” Craig’s bill would change little.

Tuttle believes miners should be required to pay taxes to mine public lands while at the same time improving the environment which allows miners to purchase sites at such incredibly low prices.

Fall admission deadline is July 26

Those who plan to start classes at Boise State University this fall semester need to complete the admissions process by July 26. This includes completing the application for admission, providing high school or college transcripts and, for some, taking the ACT or SAT exams.

The admissions process can take up to three weeks to complete, said Mark Weilacker, assistant to the dean of admissions.

Those who complete their applications files after July 26 will be accepted pending the university as non-degree-seeking students or waiting until the following semester. Non-degree-seeking students are limited to taking only 12 credits during the fall semester and are not eligible for financial aid.

The admissions deadline for the spring 1996 semester is Nov. 29. To receive a free BSU application packet, call the BSU New Student Information Center at 386-6969 or nationwide at 1-800-624-7017.

New dean for Continuing Education has been selected

Joyce Harvey-Morgan, associate director of the National Center on Adult Literacy at the University of Pennsylvania, has been selected dean of Continuing Education and coordinator of Outreach at Boise State University.

Her appointment begins Aug. 26 and is contingent upon approval by the State Board of Education.

Prior to her current position, she has held since 1993, Harvey-Morgan served as dean of community education at Temple University, State University of New York Community College in Bethlehem, PA, from 1987-1993.

"Dr. Harvey-Morgan brings to her position at BSU both strong academic qualifications and a range of administrative experience that extends from the community college setting to the national level and she brings to Boise State a unique perspective on the need for and desirability of strong adult and continuing education programs."

Harvey-Morgan earned a doctorate in adult and higher education from Florida Atlantic University. She received a master’s degree in community counseling from Lehig University, a master’s in art history from Tufts University and a B.A. in history from Oberlin College.

Among her responsibilities at the National Center on Adult Literacy, Harvey-Morgan helped plan the center’s programs, supervised their internal operations, conducted research projects and evaluated results, and provided leadership for the center’s educational technology and distance learning programs.

Harvey-Morgan will replace Bill...

One of the benefits the blue turf brought to BSU and to the city of Boise is noteworthy. The field has the status of a tourist attraction. Criner said visitors come to see the field throughout the year. Conference attendees often come in groups, tourasts and sports enthusiasts often poke camera lenses through the fence to snap pictures of the field. Families want to walk on it. Criner said the one-of-a-kind field has contributed to the inclusion of BSU in Sports Illustrated. BSU has appeared in the nationally circulated sports magazine twice, once in 1987 and again last year.

Like most unusual creations, myths have evolved around the field. A controversy began when it was thought that ducks and other waterfowl would quack the field for a lake. It was thought that birds were injuring themselves swooping in for landings on the hard surface. Although these bird landings never actually happened, Criner said he received calls from tourists who wanted to see the field where the birds land.

"The only birds that use the field are seagulls," Criner said. Seagulls congregate in any open field.

It's a good quality turf and the other teams have never had anything about it. Some fans have complained that the field is different and that they expected a green field," Criner said.

The Bronco Stadium will receive some new blue June 24.

During the proposal stage of the original blue field, some individuals said there was an NCAA rule that all fields had to be green. Fortunately for BSU, there was no such rule.

Professor, former associate dean to take on deanship at EWU

Phyllis Edmundson, a faculty member and former associate dean of BSU's College of Education, will begin work as the dean of the College of Education and Human Development at Eastern Washington University on July 1.

Edmundson has been at Boise State for 20 years, both as a student and an employee of the university. She graduated from Boise State with a bachelor's degree in elementary education and earned her master's and doctoral degrees at the University of Northern Colorado. She said she has some real pangs about leaving BSU, but that taking on a deanship at EWU is a rewarding and challenging opportunity for her.

Approximately 2000 students are enrolled in EWU's College of Education and Human Development, which graduates 35 percent more educators than BSU's College of Education, she said.

Edmundson served as the associate dean for BSU's College of Education from fall 1992 until July 1994. A professor of Foundations, Technologies and Secondary Education, Edmundson returned to the faculty this past year.

Her husband, Eldon, is the dean of BSU's College of Health Science.

"We both have jobs we're really excited about," Edmundson said.

Administrative assistant to the president retires after 30 years

KEVIN HACKETT
Staff Writer

After 31 years of service at Boise State, Jackie Cassell says she is retiring with no regrets. Cassell, a graduate of Boise Junior College, has spent the majoriy of her career since she was hired in 1964 as the administrative assistant to the president.

During her service, Cassell worked under three university presidents and a couple of interim presidents. Cassell says she was able to serve as a link between the administration and the faculty and students of the university.

"The goal has always been to provide a good academic program with quality facilities for students," Cassell said.

During her tenure, Cassell said she witnessed tremendous growth as the school progressed from Boise Junior College to Boise State College, and finally became Boise State University.

Cassell never really thought much of the respect and influence she gained over the years. She said she simply tried to make things go as smoothly as possible.

Administration is a very important part of higher education in her view; she disagrees with those who say there is too much administration—especially at the mid-management level.

"In some offices, the duties are carried out by one individual," Cassell said. "Even part-time students require service at various levels."

Cassell will not completely remove herself from the office. She is still working a few hours a week on projects that are important to her. Cassell said she plans to stay in Boise and spend time with her two grandchildren. She said she will miss the contact with students.

Several Bronco athletes from many different teams have received league academic honors for their efforts this past year.

Men's tennis player Remy Pop and women's tennis player Chin Shiu were named 1994-95 Big Sky Conference Cenex/Land O'Lakes "Scholar Athletes." Pop has an overall GPA of 3.81 in Finance and Chin had a 3.72 in Accounting.

People from four different sports held the academic all-conference honors. Men's tennis team members are Pop, sophomore Ben Davidson, 3.75 in Accounting; freshman Ryan Lazarus, 3.70 in General Business; and senior Kristen Wilden, 3.00 in Social Science/Social Studies.

Seven members of the women's tennis team were also honored. They include Shiu, junior Silil Malm, 3.78 in Accounting; senior Jennifer Blackman, 3.33 in Physical and Secondary Education; sophomore Maria Capuano, 3.17 in General Education; and sophomore Jessica Pfeiffer, 3.07 in Accounting.

Men's track honors went out to sophomore Dusty Black, 4.00 in Athletic Training; junior Ryan Puckett, 3.91 in Respiratory Therapy; sophomore Matt Olson, 3.35 in Accounting; and senior Eric Jones, 3.00 in Athletic Training.

The women's track team carried away the most honors with eight members successfully completing their year. Those honors went to junior Wendy McMann, 3.89 in Psychology, senior Tasha Bailey, 3.60 in Criminal Justice; freshman Amy Feinsinger, 3.56 in Health Science; junior Misha Looney, 3.49 in Social Work; junior Marti Arguelles, 3.45 in Accounting; senior Jovita Davis, 3.21 in Athletic Training; sophomore Abigail Ferguson, 3.05 in Health Science and sophomore Casey Bonner, 3.00 in Physical Education/Health Promotion.

Three BSU coaches also received honors for the hard work and dedication they contributed the past year.

Head track and field coach Ed Jacoby received his honor after guiding the women's track team to the outdoor championship. The title was the fourth consecutive for the women. He was named the league's track and field coach of the year following each championship.

Greg Patton, men's tennis coach, received his third consecutive honor after leading his team to the 1995 Big Sky Conference crown. He also announced the signing of Ryan Thompson from Santa Ana, Calif., to a national letter of intent during this past fall.

Mike Edles picked up his first coach of the year award after completing his third year directing the men's tennis team from the cockpit.

BSU has presented a bid to the NCAA Track and Field Committee to host the Division I National Championships in the year 2000. The decision is expected to be made later this month. Duke University has also made a bid for the same year.

Gearing up for this fall, the women's basketball program has hired a new assistant coach who has also played for the Broncos.

Janet Soderberg will replace Jill Stevens, who has been an assistant for four years. She has decided to retire from coaching and become a career mother.

Soderberg lettered all four seasons at BSU playing under coach Daugherty for three of those years. She worked as an assistant coach at the University of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif., for two years. She obtained her master's degree in Education and Counseling Psychology in 1995. Her duties will include floor coaching, recruiting, travel team, game scheduling, opponents' scouting and overseeing the program's academics.

"I am very pleased to have Janett rejoin the Boise State basketball family," Daugherty said. "She is an outstanding player and has a great passion and understanding of the game."

Running back and punt returner K.C. Adams said he gave it his best shot. It wasn't enough for the NCAA.

He received the NCAA requirements for playing athletics, but didn't meet the grades to play at Boise State.

"It's a dumb, hard-headed jock," Adams said. "Actually, I think I can play anywhere, to be honest."

Edles said Adams flew with 2,234 all-purpose yards last fall when the Broncos won the Big Sky championship and finished 13-2 to Youngstown State in the national championship game. Adams has a 1.34, according to offensive coordinator Dave Stromswold.

"I know what I did," Adams said. "I don't know, maybe he (Adams) thought somebody would come along and wave a magic wand and make him eligible, but Coach Allen does a great job. I'm a kid that lazy, he doesn't deserve the privilege of playing," Stromswold said.

"I think we are going to be fine. I don't know, maybe he (Adams) thought somebody would come along and wave a magic wand and make him eligible, but Coach Allen does a great job. I'm a kid that lazy, he doesn't deserve the privilege of playing," Stromswold said.

"I know what I did," Adams said. "I was just too much of a worrier. Plus I'm just trying to be young and do what young people do," Adams said.

Adams said he eventually hopes to be back in a BSU uniform.

Offensive Coordinator Stromswold isn't worried.

It's That Time of Year Again

Boiseans are preparing for the fifth annual Boise River Festival. Even though over 500 events will take place and an estimated $2 million will be spent, some Boiseans wish the whole thing would go away.

Pam Thier, who is opposed to the festival, is using bumper stickers to drive her point home. She started Idaho Bumper Stickers. Thier's bumper stickers focus on one theme: growth.

"It's just the volume of people. It's not the Boise we knew 16 years ago when we moved here," Thier said.

Thier feels the same way about the festival.

"Heaven help you if you have business downtown any of those days. You can't get through the town. I won't be attending the festival this year. I think Boise could put on a nice festival without all this," Thier said.

Other Boiseans have mixed reactions about the festival.

Sara Stinchcomb has a hard time getting things done.

"When I'm driving around town I can't access anything on Broadway Avenue or Ninth Street, I have to circumvent all the action. On the other hand, I like the free stuff," Stinchcomb said.

Jack Ward enjoys the photo opportunities but would rather avoid the crowds.

"I'm glad they have it. It's only once a year. I try to go early and get pictures. Trying to fight for parking is the one thing I don't enjoy," Ward said.

Some of the festival action swirls around the Boise State University campus. Parades along Capitol Boulevard draw crowds.

Lynn Wright of the Department of Campus Safety doesn't think the crowds are a problem for students.

"We don't really have problems. What they try to do is eliminate concerts and things happening in the stadium. It's real surprising because of the amount of people that come here. I think if it happened during the regular school year there probably would be a big concern," Wright said.

Stephanie Olsen, a summer resident adviser at the Towers Residence Hall, disagrees. As soon as students leave, festival-goers take resident parking spaces.

"What we usually do is tell our residents not to go anywhere. If students move their cars the parking is gone, especially along Capitol Boulevard, because of the parade. It's a problem but there is nothing we can do about it. It's open parking on the weekends. They don't ticket," Olsen said.

Certain downtown businesses see an increase in sales.

John Figuren, an Idaho Camera employee, sees more customers.

"A lot of people come in for film and processing. We're busier than usual," Figuren said.

Ted Challenger is especially happy during the festival. Challenger owns the Main Street Bistro.

"We go up by $3,000 in sales during the festival because it brings so many people out," Challenger said.

Sonic Youth frontman Thurston Moore successfully tackles the solo beast on his new album, Psychic Hearts. The album may not be a massive departure from the Sonic Youth recordings that made Moore the indie superstar he is, but it does provide us with a fuller picture of his songwriting. Subtract Kim Gordon's girly, no-nonsense vocals and Lee Ranaldo’s guitar chords from Sonic Youth and you’ve got a pretty good indication of what you’ll find on Psychic Hearts. The absence of these elements doesn’t necessarily hurt this album because Moore is no slouch in the guitar or vocal departments.

Moore handles guitar duties with Tim Foljahn, and Sonic Youth drummer Steve Shelley keeps the beat familiar. Moore’s songs are hardly poppy, but there is a hook trying to free itself here and there. They retain the tension that fuels Sonic Youth. On the nervously energetic opener “Queen Bee and Her Pals” Moore catches us with a hypnotic guitar line playing the acoustic rambling that I’ve been dying for since I heard Sonic Youth’s “Winner’s Blues.” Moore avoids show-offy guitar work on the bloated and pretentious displays of ego rather than talent.

RIDDLE ME THIS — WHY WAS ‘BATMAN FOREVER’ RELEASED?

BY LAURA DELGADO
Entertainment Co-Editor

Batman Forever opens with a dull Batman-fights-the-bad-guys scene as Kilmer battles Harvey Two-Face (Tommy Lee Jones). Two-Face has returned from the pages of DC comics to murder Batman and to deliver the only truly funny line in the movie: "Nothing like a bad case of gas." yells Two-Face as he hones down Batman with toxins.

From the battle with Two-Face, the movie choppy switches to the halls of Bruce Wayne Enterprises. Mr. Wayne is confounded by a disgruntled worker (Jim Carrey) who demands that Mr. Wayne fund his newly invented brain manipulator. Mr. Wayne politely turns him down, saying the product just raises too many questions.

As Carrey’s character transforms into the question mark, he demands that Mr. Wayne fund his newly invented brain manipulator. Mr. Wayne politely turns him down, saying the product just raises too many questions.

ELEVATOR TO HELL

The only big difference between this film and the previous two is Robin. Chris O’Donnell revives the role of Batman’s famous Boy Wonder with a fresh and sassy twist. The blossoming friendship between the two men is fun and if director Joel Schumacher had given this film any thought at all, he should have thought about introducing Robin earlier in the film.

Mistakenly, Robin’s role is just as insignificant as the rest of the characters and the result is a hodge-podge mess of good actors in a lousy film.

EXPERIENCE THE IDAHO SHAKESPEARE FESTIVAL

The Idaho Shakespeare Festival is in full swing through September 23. Bring a picnic and enjoy the fun on the banks of the Boise River at 400 W. Park Center Blvd. Doors open at 6:30 p.m. and performances begin at 8 p.m. Tickets are priced from $10.50 to $16.50 and may be purchased at the ISF office at 412 S. 9th, at all Select Seat outlets or by calling 336-9221. 4-show and 8-show season ticket packages are also available.

Fridays are "The Two Gentlemen of Verona." The madcap story has been reimagined by two generations, the first performance of a Duke of York's daughter. Bonds of friendship and love are tested, anchoring Shakespeare's play with wit and wisdom.

Opening July 1 will be "Love's Labor's Lost." A comedy of love and fools.

July 22 is the opening night for King Henry the Fourth, Part One. Considered Shakespeare's most brilliant historical drama, this play chronicles the rise of King Henry, the rise of his son Hal and the regrouping of Sir John Falstaff.

The final work of the summer opens August 5. Conflicts and characters prove fascinating in King Henry the Fourth, Part Two. Shakespeare wove in only what kind of individual makes a leader, but more importantly, what does the role of leadership make of the individual for the audience? For more information, call 336-9221.
