The time has come, chickadees, when I must depart from you. After suffering together through countless "objective" tests, self-worshipping professors, tedious homework assignments and last-minute research papers, our yearly academic battle draws to an end.

"But, Les," I can almost hear you wailing, "once you've left us, whose enlightening feminist presence will illuminate our path through this murky mire of Idaho conservatism? By whose Leftist compass will we plot our progressive trek? To whom will we turn for guidance when the fists of Republicanism come a-knockin'? In other words, what will we do without you?"

Worry not, my little flowering feminists. In anticipation of our separation, I've paired a list of potential summer stumbling blocks with some meaty slices of feminist wisdom. While the summer may provide you the ideal opportunity to stretch your new progressive wings, you just might want to clip the following list, laminate it and stuff it in a wallet or purse to ensure its constant and reassuring presence. You can call it your "Leftist Summer Survival Kit," or, as I prefer, "WWL(esleigh)D?: A Reference Guide."

Your first hint of summer will likely arrive in the form of elevated temperatures (yes, after seven years of college, you, too, may rise to this level of insight and reason). Despite the stifling heat, resist those A/C-crankling urges; not only are you too poor for the hike in your electric bill, but that wall unit is not your environment's friend! Instead of knob-spinning, I suggest sitting quietly before a fan, soaking in a tub of ice cubes or sticking your undergarments in the freezer before slipping them on.

Your second summer dilemma will arise around June 1. For the next thirty days, you will become irrationally obsessed with white satin, florists and plane tickets to Las Vegas. WWLD? Resist the chapel with all her might. Below lie a few reasons why:

1. The average heterosexual marriage lasts around nine years.

2. Husbands equally share household chores in eleven percent of American homes.

3. After divorcing, a woman's standard of living decreases by thirty percent while her ex's increases by fifteen percent.

4. Eleven percent of all reported criminal assaults are domestic disputes between husband and wife.

5. Fifty to sixty-five percent of all heterosexual marriages end in divorce.

Even more importantly than your eventual marital demise and the resulting waste of nine precious years, the triteness of a June wedding would absolutely mortify "L."

Use the increased daylight hours to attend poetry readings, watch "Shakespeare in the Park," and volunteer for all those causes that crank your progressive wheel.

Inevitably, you will have the opportunity to visit the beach, a pool or some similar aquatic body. Unless you feel utterly comfortable lounging with a hundred other half-naked souls (or you just can't wait to show off your belly button ring), icksnay on the ikini-bay or eedo-spay. I don't care if you arrive at the beach wearing your Sunday finest, as long as you feel physically and emotionally comfy. Sister swimmers, forget the hourglass-enhancing celery sticks. Sure, the lifeguard toots your whistle, but take my advice: grab a Fig Newton, slip into a demure one-piece and forget it. Not only should you eat whatever the hell makes you feel good, but trust me, he's gay.

At risk of sounding like that annoying "Everyone's Free to Wear Sunscreen" song leaking its way through the pop stations, slather yourself with SPF 15 before having too much fun in the sun. Oh, and don't sunbathe. Period.

Attend the Pride March in June.

Father's Day will sneak up on you when you least expect it. On that sunny June day, make a special trip to your father's house, hug him profusely and then gently sit him down. "I know you expect a card, a cake and some presents on this Father's Day. Rather than supporting rampant consumerism and purchasing, oh, say a silly old golf bag or some Clint Eastwood movies, I made you something extra special. See, it's a daily calendar! Every day has a special quote on such subjects as sports-induced apathy, spontaneous emotionality and same-sex hugging. Happy Father's Day!" Guaranteed to bring a tear to his eye.

Summer blockbusters: to see or not to see? In considering WWLD, you'll need to gauge the viewability of the movie on this simple little scale:

1. Does the title include the word "renegade" or any of its synonyms?
2. Is silicone apparent in any other forms aside from paint and insulation?
3. Did the writers and producers forget to co-star even one woman or racial/ethnic minority? (Puerto Rican maids, Black thugs and Japanese tourists do not count!)
4. Does it include more than three car chases?
5. Do gratuitous sports figures appear in any scenes, even peripherally?

If you can answer "yes" to one or more of these questions, you might want to skip this one. At the very least, I advise you to wait till it reaches the dollar theatres.

Skewer, baste and barbecue vegetables on the grill.

If you fall in line with most other Americans, you regard the summer months as seventy-six days surrounding your two-week vacation.

Here's where "L" wouldn't go: Disneyland. I have to admit, that gay/Southern Baptist thing really tickled my tail feathers, but I just can't bring myself to ignore all those chunky bits of Disney slop clogging the entertainment trough. That, and it kinda creeps me out how they make so much money off those poor, neurotic people trying to buy a slice of the fantasy childhood they never lived. WWLD instead? Go camping.

The good ol' fourth of July. The day we've devoted to mindless consumption of nationalistic propaganda through our participation in orgiastic displays of lights, whistles, sparks, and flaming scraps of paper. Ah, Independence Day.

Read. Before you throw your semester's collection of textbooks at me, I mean later. After you've recovered from Finalitis (characterized by sleeplessness, brain fever and inflammation of the nerves), take some time to remember what reading felt like before authority figures force fed it to you. Initially, reading may evoke painful memories or flashbacks, but with perseverance, you may once again become a successful recreational reader. Besides, you'd better keep those mental hinges well-oiled, lest you should saunter into next semester accompanied by an audible intellectual squeak.

I probably haven't covered every possible situation. If, in the event of an unmentioned emergency, you find yourself unable to radically react, simply ask yourself: WWLD? This should help you successfully navigate through the next three months. Until then, my progressive proteges, have a sunny, funny and fruitful summer. It's WLWD.

FINALISTS

I vividly remember the day I walked into The Arbiter office to apply for this job. It was a humid August afternoon, right in the middle of the Summer of Love. Ah, 1967—what a tripped-out, groovy year. I was feeling a bit insecure, as I hadn't yet become comfortable with my pinkish green mumu and cumbersome chains of peace beads. Plus, I kept tripping over my amber waves of hippie locks. But I managed to find the editor and offered my proposal:

"Hi, my name is Starchild. I am a brilliant writer and would like to teach your readers how to love."

"Don't you hate when you can't get the trapdoor to activate? Well, I guess I'll have to listen to you."

"Indeed you will, my son."

"First of all, why are you dressed like that? It's 1996."

"Really?"

"Yes. All the hippies have showered. Wake up."

"I feel really stupid."

"As well you should."

"Well, this is just plain uncomfortable. Maybe I should go home and change."

"I think so."

When I got home, I discovered that he was right. 1996. Evidently, I drank too much hooch the previous evening while listening to The Doors. I cleaned up, went bald, put on a suit, and returned to the office.

"OK. I'm back."

"Much better. So—you're a brilliant writer, huh?"

"Did I say that? No, I'm actually fairly bad at that writin' stuff. But I'd like to try it. I dutifully promise to turn in my columns on time. Also, I will conduct exhaustive research before putting anything—"

"Want some Cheetos?"

"No, thanks. They stain my fingers."

"Yeah. Me, too. But I can't stop eating them. They're delicious."

"All right. I'll have one. Look, my hands completely orange already."

"Hell, that ain't jack squat, man! Look at me. I'm the orange man—goo goo ga joo!"

"Wow, you really are orange. What does goo goo ga joo mean?"

Those days are gone. Last night, I voluntarily put myself in the worst situation imaginable. I went to something called the Neurolux.

"I don't know. I heard Chris Farley say it one time. I think he got it from a Beatles song."

"Oh, yeah. 'I am the Walrus.' That's right. I think it was 'coo coo ca choo,' though. But I could be wrong. It doesn't matter. These are great. Do you have any milk?"

"Sure, in the fridge. Help yourself. Would you mind making me a ham sandwich?"

"You bet your ass."

"You're hired."

Anyway, it was a wonderful job interview. Since then, every week I have immersed myself in horrible situations—homeless shelters, jails, Utah—and commented upon them. Oh, and occasionally I wrote about Bill Clinton's sex life. But those days are gone. Last night, I voluntarily put myself in the worst situation imaginable. I went to something called the Neurolux.

Effective immediately, I am announcing my resignation. You won't have Damon Hunzeker to kick around anymore.

after watching 30 seconds of MTV's "The Real World." Before I entered the strange Neuroluxian universe, I expected to see women in KISS boots with snakes around their necks and men with eye shadow. But I was ripped off. The place was full of the same kind of people I used to be—many of whom I actually liked. Immensely disturbed by my absent disgust, I ran home in tears.

I tried to write about how stupid everybody was, but my old friend irritation had abandoned me. Instead, I laughed with a preposterously good-looking woman of whom I'm rather fond and learned how to play George Harrison's solo from "Get Back" on guitar. I can't possibly fathom a more enjoyable evening.

So, effective immediately, I am announcing my resignation. You won't have Damon Hunzeker to kick around anymore. If you people aren't going to keep your part of the deal—bugging me—than I'm not going to play, either. Thanks for ruining my life, you bastards. I quit. Goodbye.

The Kodokan Judo Club was officially recognized as of April 22, bringing the experience of former BSU club member and third degree black belt, John Hussman, with it.

Hussman's efforts to revitalize Boise State after a seventeen year hiatus have finally been realized. Now, with its official collegiate club status and the matches it will bring, judo

But Hussman, along with club president Rafael Saaykan, are planning more than just practice and tournaments.

"This won't be just a club for judo," according to Hussman. "We have camping and fishing trips planned. Hiking all day is great for endurance, and spending the evening in hot springs is just great. We want everyone to have fun."

enthusiasts can travel to local tournaments, allowing more opportunity for rank advancement. "You have to beat someone of equal rank or higher to graduate," notes Hussman. "We're looking at ten to twelve tourna-

There are universities around the nation with full-fledged judo programs, complete with scholarships. And that's the direction Kodokan is headed.

"Our ultimate goal is to get judo to a title IX sport. That's NCAA sanctioned competition."

But for now the club's focus will stay on conditioning and practicing the various throws, chokes and pins which characterize judo. Clinics are being planned for next year with Olympic medalists who have competed on the world circuit and will share their knowledge.

Though an official club, Kodokan is not restricted to BSU students.

"Anyone can come, students or not," encourages Hussman. "Our goal is to teach anyone who wants to learn judo, and to provide a fun and relaxed—but respectful—atmosphere."

For those interested in joining the Kodokan Judo Club, the meeting time is Tuesdays at 5:30 p.m. at the Capital High wrestling room. Practice will follow from 6-8 p.m. For more information call Rafael Saakyan at 343-1814.
