I suppose I have a bit more faith in the intellectual abilities of Boise State students than it seems some members of this university are willing to afford them. I stand by The Arbiter's decision to run the Revisionist advertisement and no amount of bullying (through recent death threats and tossing of issues around campus) will make us regret the choices we have made.

It saddens me to think student minds are being led to believe that the only way to conquer false viewpoints is to brush them under the rug. Personally, I would rather have these opinions out in the open, discussed, and refuted on an academic level rather than choosing ignorance. It was hoped that the running of this insert would promote some level of discussion rather than emotional acting out. Regrettably, it's turned into an excuse to attempt to attack and intimidate the staff of The Arbiter and students of Boise State.

We will continue to uphold the right for everyone's voice to be heard — short of explicit obscenity and legally defined hate speech — no matter how offensive. Because the second we start to pick and choose we become a danger even to ourselves.

Getting black students pumped up about higher ed.

A zillion reasons to hate PeopleSoft (as if you needed more).

Pops play for tots.

Now we have fans!

The opinions presented in advertisements, editorials and cartoons within reflect the views of those who created them and are not necessarily the views of The Arbiter or its staff.
Supreme Court edges closer to decision on student fee allocations while the debate heats up

The First Amendment: Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The courts reasoned that student activity fees should "reflect the reality that student life in its many dimensions includes the necessity of wide-ranging speech and inquiry and that student expression provides an integral part of the University's educational mission."

University of Virginia: Rosenberger v. Virginia

Ronald Rosenberger, a member of Wide-Awake Productions (WAP), a University of Virginia student-run Christian newspaper, requested funds to pay for the cost of printing the organization's newspaper. The University of Virginia denied Rosenberger's request, citing the reason that Wide Awake was a religious activity and that the refusal to pay for the printing costs due to the publication's religious editorial viewpoint, violated their rights to freedom of speech and press, and the free exercise of religion, and to equal protection of the law. The courts ruled in favor of the university, stating that denial of student fee support did not constitute "impermissible" discrimination against WAP's freedom of speech. Furthermore, the courts reasoned that the compelling interest in maintaining strict separation of church and state justified the university's decision to deny payment.

In June of 1995 the Supreme Court overturned the lower courts' rulings saying that the WAP newspaper served as a source of news, information and opinion. The court reasoned that student activity fees should "reflect the reality that student life in its many dimensions includes the necessity of wide-ranging speech and inquiry and that student expression provides an integral part of the university's educational mission." The Supreme Court ruled that student fees are mandatory, and an objecting student can not call on First Amendment rights to demand a proportionate return "for speech to which he or she does not subscribe."

University of Wisconsin-Madison: Southworth v. Grebe

In 1996 University of Wisconsin Madison students filed suit against the university. They contested the use of mandatory student activity fees to pay for 18 groups whose missions the students opposed (including the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Campus Center, the Women's Center, and the Madison AIDS Support Network). The plaintiffs claimed that University funding of organizations which engage in political and ideological advocacy violated their First Amendment rights. The lower courts ruled in favor of the plaintiffs. They asserted that the students' right to not finance political or ideological activities outweighed the university's authority to promote the educational mission by promoting a free exchange of ideas. The Supreme Court is currently reviewing the appeal regarding Southworth v. Grebe.
Oregon Student Public Interest Research Group (OSPIRG), a group which supports liberal political causes. The lower courts ruled in favor of the university. They reasoned that First Amendment rights were not threatened by the distribution of some student fee revenues to the OSPIRG because steps had been taken to prevent the funds from being used for political activities.

What does this mean to Boise State Students?

Money Matters

The BSU Student Handbook reports that full-time students pay $17 to ASBSU. That money is then split into several ASBSU account areas. According to BSU administrator Teresa Waynetska, 33 percent of the money earned is divided among 147 recognized BSU organizations, equaling $.26 per club from each student. There are currently 164 recognized clubs on campus, but religious organizations can not receive funding from ASBSU.

The Arguments

So should your $.26 support groups that you oppose? Supporters of student fees argue that members of an institution may not always like what that organization does, but they choose to associate with it despite practices they disagree with. For example, the Supreme Court tried a case regarding whether American citizens should have to pay taxes for welfare reform when they didn't agree with the program. The court ruled that as a citizen of the United States you choose to associate yourself with U.S. laws and policies. The same can be argued for the university system. However, those opposed to mandatory fees side with the Seventh Circuit Court's decision for the Wisconsin-Madison case.

"In giving student fees to organizations devoted to promoting their ideological beliefs, the fact that some educational benefit may come from it is secondary, and therefore is not sufficiently germane to overcome the objecting students' constitutional rights."

Where should the line get drawn between an organization's educational mission and internal disagreements?

A brief filed with the Supreme Court on behalf of the American Council on Education reads, "At some point it simply becomes impossible to separate the ideological and political from the educational and informative. Faced with a project that calls upon them to do the impossible, with the knowledge that in the effort they might also do the unconstitutional, many universities will respond by funding no student organizations at all or only those that seem to pose no risk whatsoever."

How the Supreme Court decision will affect BSU

If you think registering is a headache now, wait until you have to fill out more paperwork to decide which organization receives your money. Peter D. Fox, Director of Public Information for the University of Wisconsin, says "If you've got 150,000 students in the system and each one wants to fund this and not that, it's readily apparent that we've got a tremendous administrative job ahead of us." Should the Supreme Court rule against mandatory student fees, organizations such as the Skydive Club, Black Student Alliance, Pool and Billiards Club, Wilderness Survival Club, Bisexuals, Gays, Lesbians and Allies for Diversity, Intertribal Native Council and other clubs that rely on student fees could challenge tuition payments that supported research, faculty appointments, class visits, or lectures with which they philosophically disagree."

World AIDS Day encourages testing

Today World AIDS Day is being observed around the world. In downtown Boise, Planned Parenthood of Idaho and HIV Lifeguard volunteers will distribute condoms, ribbons and coupons for HIV testing.

The theme of this year's World AIDS Day, "AIDS: Find the Silence. Listen, learn, live," aims to promote communication among those affected directly and indirectly by HIV/AIDS. As of 1999 an estimated 33.4 million men, women and children worldwide live with the disease. If current trends continue, nearly 40 million adults will become infected with HIV by the year 2000. In 1998, more than 2.5 million 15-24 year-olds became infected with HIV. So far this year, 520 people in Idaho tested positively for the HIV virus.

Planned Parenthood of Idaho encourages all sexually active people to get tested for the HIV virus. Anyone coming into Planned Parenthood during the first week of December will receive five dollars off of an HIV test if they mention this article.

Program encourages black students to pursue higher education

The tenth annual Black to the Future allows black high school students "to get pumped up about higher education," says BSU minority enrollment counselor Ramon Silva.

The Black Student Alliance works in conjunction with Silva to produce the annual event. Last week, Boise State students Faida Muzaliwa and vice president of the Black Student Alliance, Franklin Burke spent an evening in Silva's office calling black students in Idaho reminding them to attend. Thirty-five high school students showed up for the 1998 Black to the Future. Organizers hope to see at least 40 students this year.

According to Silva, only about 150 black high school students attend schools in the Treasure Valley area. He is pleased to see such a high percentage attending the event. Some years saw fewer participants. When Burke went to Black to the Future in 1997, only five or six students showed up.

During the day, high school students learn about scholarships, attend a class, take a campus tour and socialize with current Boise State students. This year's new activities include a black history knowledge bowl, scavenger hunt and dance held Friday night at 9 p.m. in the Hatch ballroom. Muzaliwa encourages all Boise State students to attend and support the black high schoolers and get them excited about college. The free event includes a live DJ.

Black professors will speak with participants about higher education opportunities. A motivational speaker, local business owner Vincent Kituku, will address the Friday night dinner.

Participants come from all grades of high school. The entire program is free to the students. The university provides all meals and lodging. Muzaliwa encourages anyone of any race to get involved with Black to the Future "and be a part of these kids' lives."

Kappa Alpha Psi, a black fraternity currently attempting to establish a chapter at Boise State, will also attend the event. Members from the chapter at Idaho State University will perform a step performance at the dance. Fraternity members will use choreographed foot stomping as well as canes and other props on Saturday when an interest meeting will also be held to provide information about the fraternity and to recruit members.

Muzaliwa attended Black to the Future last year. She was a senior at Eagle High School, but wasn't sure about where she wanted to enroll in college. She says the informational event gave her a feel for college life.

Burke, a graduate of Boise High School, participated in Black to the Future in 1997. He attended a similar event at Idaho State University. At Boise State, he says he learned a lot about the different cultures on campus. Burke has lived off-campus, but still gets involved with school activities. He credits Black to the Future with introducing him to different aspects of the school. "It brought BSU to me," he explains.

Encouraging black students to continue with higher education seems to payoff, notes Silva. This year, the number of black students at Boise State surpassed the size of the Native American population for the first time, with around 200 students.

BSU offers similar orientation programs for Hispanic and Native American students. For the past three years, Mirando Adelante has exposed Hispanic students to higher education. That event takes place in February.

This marks the first year for the Native American program, which will be held in conjunction with the Native American Conference this April.

The Black Student Alliance serves as a way for black students to get to know each other. Interested students may attend a meeting today at noon. The next event Black Student Alliance will organize is the Martin Luther King dinner on Jan. 19. Anyone interested in working with the BSA can call the Multi-Ethnic Center at 426-4317.
How many Jack antenna balls have been sold?

Jack in the Box, the fast-food chain that gave the Meaty Cheesy Boys their big break, sells Jack antenna balls for 99 cents each.

Since Foodmaker Inc. reintroduced Jack as its corporate spokesman in 1995, they have sold over four million antenna balls. The company has no estimate of how many remain on antennas.

Starting on Dec. 6, Jack lovers can enjoy a new option for their antenna ball repertoire: the Millennium Jack antenna ornament, which replaces Jack's traditional hat with a party hat and includes a noisemaker.

What is the new building in The Ram's parking lot on Broadway?

The new development, at 590 S. Broadway, is a strip mall that will cater both to Boise State students and business people who work nearby.

The first business to operate in the shopping center will be Hollywood Video, scheduled to open in mid-December. Senor Fresh, which serves fresh Mexican food, Boise's third Teriyaki Time and a Jamba Juice (formerly Zuka Juice) plan to open by mid-February.

As of press time, the developers were also negotiating with a chiropractor, a check-cashing store and an espresso shop.

According to Bob Mitchell, the leasing agent for the development, demand for the location has been strong.

The 16,000-square-foot mall will offer Greenbelt access and outdoor plaza seating.

BSU artists display work at A Christmas Tour

Skyler Pierce and Pete Romberg, Boise State art students, will soon show off their works in a multi-million dollar home. A Christmas Tour, sponsored by the United Society of Artists, brings together the community and artists to raise funds for the Women and Children's Alliance.

Painters, sculptors, photographers and others will decorate eight multi-million dollar homes with their own works. Interested viewers or purchasers can then examine the homes on Dec. 4-5. Local merchants are also getting involved by displaying some of their goods in homes. USA hopes this will help connect the general community to artists.

As a special bonus for the fine art appreciator, two original Salvador Dalí works will be displayed along with Rusciano's work, at 9403 Winterwood Lane. Rusciano, a local artist, founded USA in September. He wants to help gain credit and appreciation for artists, whom he says fill an important place in society. Twenty percent of all sales of artists' works will go to USA, who will use all the money to help needy families during the holidays.

Interested viewers can purchase tickets for $77 at participating Movie Javas. Tickets are also available at the doors for $9. The ticket allows access to all eight homes, spread between Boise and Eagle. In addition to the art, local musicians will perform at each house.

Who voted for Boise State in the USA Today/ESPN coaches' poll?

Boise State, fresh off a big win against Idaho, finally got its first-ever vote in the USA Today/ESPN coaches' poll in the rankings released on Nov. 21.

One football coach, somewhere in the United States, voted for Boise State as the 25th best team in the nation. That vote puts Boise State in a 39th-place tie on the poll.

Boise State begins new dance tradition

G ot a date? Posters plastered across campus ask that question and start students wondering "got a date" for what? The Associated Students of BSU, the Residence Hall Association and the dormitory halls are sponsoring Boise State's first winter formal dance, Under the Stars on Friday, Dec. 3 in the Jordan D Ballroom beginning at 8 p.m.

The gala will include a live disc jockey, professional photographer and catering. The admission price of $3.50 for singles and $5.50 for couples includes child care for those students with youngsters.

"The formal is going to be in the grand style," Andy Williams, a major organizer of the dance and Chaffee Hall resident advisor, explains. "We have budgeted twenty-five hundred dollars for the dance. Our target audience is anywhere between two hundred to four hundred people."

One of the major reasons student organizations around campus support this dance comes from the accreditation review of Boise State earlier this year, Williams says. "The visiting representative from other schools found it interesting that we have almost no campus community. Functions like this help to create a greater sense of community," Williams comments.

Plans for the dance began in August. Williams and Sarah Haven have been the formal's primary organizers and advocates.

"This year is just a test year. We can't really lose money. But we will be disappointed if it does not work out," Williams explains.

The dress code for Under the Stars requires ladies to wear formal gowns; gentlemen must come attired in sport coats, ties and slacks.

Broncos destroy Vandals: earn last hurrah in Bronco Stadium for seniors

Pete Erlendson

For twenty-three seniors, the Bronco Athletic department and countless fans, these past four years have offered nothing short of tragedy, coupled with a tremendous amount of plain old frustration.

The Bronco family has lost a coach to cancer, one in the aftermath of the death of Pokey Allen and one left to coach his alma mater. They've lost a teammate, 21 games, and most importantly, the Boise State football team lost their pride.

But then came the 1999 season and the Broncos' outlook seemed so much brighter. Heading into the season with a second year coach at the helm and coming off their first division I-A winning season ever, some demons and set the standard for all Bronco teams to come.

The Broncos had suffered blow after blow, had fallen, and were not getting up. Yet, when it appeared that a sad story of twenty-three seniors would end the way it all began, they rose to greatness and now the Broncos are champions.

At the Broncos football banquet last week the host, former Boise State nose tackle Jeff Caves, closed the ceremony on these words: "And just remember what Dr. John Keiser (former Boise State University president) told us: 'It's a privilege to be a Bronco.'"
Boise State students offered discount for H-Bowl

Bronco Athletic officials plan to offer several thousand discounted student tickets for the upcoming Crucial.com Humanitarian Bowl. General admission passes went on sale last week and officials estimate, so far, 12,000 have been sold.

The seats are located in the new east section of Bronco Stadium. Tickets typically cost around $30 but Boise State students will be able to purchase theirs for half that. Passes can be picked up at any Select-a-Seat outlet or the Athletic Ticket office for the Dec. 30 game.

AT TIAA-CREF,
LOW EXPENSES ARE A HIGH PRIORITY.

All financial companies charge operating fees and expenses - some more than others. Of course, the lower the expenses you pay, the better. That way, more of your money goes where it should - toward building a comfortable future.

As the largest retirement system in the world,1 we have among the lowest expenses in the insurance and mutual fund industries.2

In fact, TIAA-CREF's 0.35% average fund expenses are a fraction of the expense charges of comparable funds.3 It's one reason why Morningstar says, "TIAA-CREF sets the standard in the financial services industry."

A focus on your future

Of course, expenses are only one factor to consider when you make an investment decision, Morningstar also noted our commitment to "consumer education, service" and "solid investment performance." Because that can make a difference in the long run, too.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe people would like to spend more in retirement, not on their retirement company. Today, over two million people count on that approach to help them build financial security. So can you.

1 Based on $250 million in assets under management. 2 Standard of Fee's Insurance Rating Analysis, 1998 and a lower analysis, 1999. 3 Morningstar Analyst column. 4 Morningstar's average fund had total expense ratios for 1998 of 1.28%, plus an insurance expense of 0.43%. Broncos open home schedule with wins over ISU and Loyola Marymount

Josh Jordan  Sports Writer

Last Tuesday night, while most of us were looking forward to a well-deserved Thanksgiving break, the Boise State men’s basketball team opened their home season with a victory over Idaho State. Then, on Saturday night, while we were all planning our exercise programs after gorging ourselves on turkey and stuffing, the Broncos were dominating Loyola Marymount in the Pavilion.

After opening the season with a tough loss on the road to Northern Arizona, the Broncos came home to the friendly confines of the Pavilion in search of their first win. Tuesday marked the 82nd meeting between Boise State and Idaho State and like many previous meetings between the two rivals the contest went down to the wire.

After storming out to a 12-2 lead and increasing it to 26-11 the Broncos appeared to be ready to roll over the Bengals. However, sloppy play and missed free throws by Boise State enabled Idaho State to stay in the contest. At the half the Broncos led 33-22.

For the first five minutes of the second half the home team held the advantage extending it to 42-33 on a dunk by Kejuan Woods, but the Bengals weren’t ready to roll-over just yet. An 11-point run in which Idaho State used a taller line-up to establish a presence under the boards gave them a 44-42 edge.

Boise State struggled slightly with coach Rod Jensen’s technical offense as players failed to find the open man and often stood watching their teammates. This enabled the overmatched Bengals to stay in the game. With just over six minutes left and the score tied at 46, the Broncos came alive. Abe Jackson made a 3-point shot to reclaim the lead. After a lay-up by the Bengal’s Ammer Johnson, Jackson sank two free throws, giving Boise State a 51-48 advantage. On Idaho State’s next possession Woods jumped in front of a Bengal pass and raced the length of the court for a crowd pleasing reverse dunk.

Woods’ breakaway dunk proved to be the momentum turner as the Broncos slowly re-built their lead and came away with a 64-56 victory. Despite the win, Tuesday night’s game showed the Bronco’s struggling at times with their signature zone defense, a problem Saturday’s opponent, Loyola Marymount, would certainly attempt to capitalize upon.

Very early on it became apparent Boise State had been working hard on their defense in practice. The Broncos swarmed Loyola forcing turnovers and building a 22-10 advantage following a steal and lay-up by C.J. Williams who looked quick and agile as ever, showing no signs of the knee injuries that plagued his last season.

Boise State struggled early with their outside shot, going just 1 for 7 from three-point range in the first half. In spite of their lackluster first-half performance from beyond the arc, the Broncos ended the half leading 31-21.

With Bronco scorers Kejuan Woods and Abe Jackson struggling from the field, going a combined 10 for 26, Eagle High product Clint Hordeman responded with 20 points. Every time Loyola began creeping back into the game Hordeman would come up with a gutsy steal or driving lay-up in traffic. Perhaps his biggest contribution was back to back three point shots with just over two minutes left giving the Broncos a 64-47 lead.

Abe Jackson offered nothing but praise for his teammate following the game. “ Clint hit two big threes that basically just broke the back of Loyola and those were huge. He just did a lot of good things today that really helped us out,” said Jackson. “ He’s a solid player, if you look at the statistics I’m sure he doesn’t have many turnovers and he plays a lot of minutes, this game really suited him today running up and down and banging around and getting tough points.”

Behind the gritty play of Hordeman and intense team defense the Broncos cruised to a 70-50 win. The game may have been closer if Loyola possessed any free-throw capabilities whatsoever. Boise State sent them to the charity stripe 24 times in the second half alone with the Lions only making 12 of them.

The Broncos travel to 25th ranked Gonzaga for their next game on Dec. 1. The Bulldogs advanced to the Elite Eight of last year’s NCAA Tournament and will provide Boise State their toughest test of the season thus far.

"I think they’re still living off that run in the NCAA tournament and I think someone needs to bring them off their cloud and what better team than Boise State to go in there and get a win on Wednesday?” muses Jackson.

After Gonzaga things don’t get much easier for the team as they return home on Saturday for a game against Weber State. The Wildcats shocked the nation last season when they upset perennial national powerhouse North Carolina in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Sophomore forward/center Abe Jackson hits a pull-up jumper against ISU. Jackson led the Broncos with 17 points.
PeopleSoft not pleasing many people

University officials introduced PeopleSoft in the hopes that it could integrate Boise State's financial, personnel and student information, making data retrieval easier on all levels. However, that's not the way it worked this fall. Boise State is one of the first schools to use the system, which meant that many of the bugs came out here, leading to corrupted files and late checks for students. The project was supposed to only cost $5.6 million but now the price tag has hit $12.6 million.

And guess whose paying the price...

Sara Mitton
news writer

Throughout the fall semester complaints of late financial aid and registration problems have echoed around campus. PeopleSoft, the new computer operating system at Boise State, continually catches the blame for these inconveniences and more. Officials promise that since the software will integrate information across the university, the final benefits will be worth the suffering.

In addition to these setbacks, the expenses for the new system have doubled the estimated budget set in 1997. Independent auditors recently completed an investigation into these extra costs.

During the initial planning stages, Boise State officials believed the PeopleSoft program would cost about $5.6 million. However, Stacy Pearson, BSU associate vice president for finance, says it cost $10.5 million just to buy the software and implement it. Then hardware had to be purchased and additional staff trained. Also when some of the software didn't work correctly, Boise State had to pay for consulting expenses. "This extra consulting contributed most to exceeding the budget," says Pearson.

The original software contractor went bankrupt leaving only two years to implement Peoplesoft in time for Y2K compatibility, claims Pearson. There wasn't time to wait for more money to become available, so extra dollars were spent in a rush to install the system.

Currently, the second stage of the PeopleSoft installation is underway, which includes upgrading the software. This upgrade will eventually allow students to access documents such as transcripts, and to register over the Internet. Pearson says they are staying within the budget during this second phase, which costs $5.5 million. This stage should be completed by February of 2000. From there web access, called Campus Connection, can also be implemented.

Has all the trouble been worth it so far? Not for some students. After Boise State senior Charmayne Alegria waited in line for an hour to register a few weeks ago, she was told that a hold had to be cleared on her account. The computer system showed she owed $573.75 for overload credit fees. Alegria claims she felt baffled since she had only registered for 19 credits. While she tried to clear the false debt, someone from the Account Maintenance Center told Alegria a glitch in the computer system was found that may have caused the mistake during the drop/add process. Yet, the office insisted she submit an appeal to clear her account.

"I know I'm not the only student with this complaint," says Alegria, "and if we conquer these problems together, the bureaucrats demanding an appeal for their own error might be more careful in the future." Alegria was planning on graduating in May but hasn't even been able to register for the spring semester. She waits for her appeal to be considered before the board in early December.

"We know students have been inconvenienced and we're not happy about that," says Pearson. About 420 other schools in the country have implemented PeopleSoft. It is the second largest software company in the nation. Yet, many other users are experiencing problems as well. Pearson claims Boise State intends to contact Peoplesoft and request a portion of the money back since some of the software didn't work as it should have.

Mark Wheeler, dean of enrollment services, insists students get frustrated because they haven't seen the outcome of the new system yet. "These things don't happen quickly, Right now we are building the foundation," states Wheeler.

Several factors led to the long registration lines this year, says Wheeler. Peoplesoft contributed to the wait, but problems would have occurred with any new system, he observes. There were also times when the computers slowed down and these problems weren't anticipated, so the registration office didn't have enough staff.

"People have worked hard on this project," insists Wheeler. BSU employees have had to work extra hours and endure frustrations in the last several months. It's difficult that the results can't be seen now, but it will be getting better, claims Wheeler.

The independent auditor's report on the implementation of the new system had not been released at press time. The State Board of Education will decide if the expense of Peoplesoft was worth it financially. Meanwhile, Boise State students look to the future for the benefits that will supposedly follow the many inconveniences.
The Idaho Review garners good reviews of its own

Jessica Holmes, a &e writer

The inaugural issue of The Idaho Review appeared on bookstore shelves in December of 1998. In a short time the literary world has lauded the small collection of fiction, poetry and essays published through the BSU's master of fine arts program. Alan Cheuse, book reviewer for NPR's "All Things Considered" wrote in a letter to the editor, "I don't know that I've seen such a high quality list of contributors, and such good work by them, since the early days of some of the best magazines we know."

The rest of the nation tends to agree. In a compilation titled The Best American Short Stories of 1999, listed three pieces from The Idaho Review among the select "100 other distinguished stories of 1998." The caliber of these pieces equals that of national magazines such as Harper's and Esquire.

"Generally, the reputation of a literary journal such as this grows very slowly," says editor Mitch Wieland. "But the response to this first issue is beyond my wildest dreams."

With The Idaho Review Wieland wanted to fill a void. BSU literati may find a soapbox in Cold Drill, but Wieland preferred a journal that "would not give preference to region but draw writing from anywhere."

Provost Darrell Jones offers the same sentiment. "BSU literati may find a soapbox in Cold Drill, but Wieland preferred a journal that "would not give preference to region but draw writing from anywhere."

Jones, a former professor of English with a background in poetry, understands the benefits of a journal. The Idaho Review was given a single starter contribution of six thousand dollars. Wieland began an impassioned plea for fictional pieces.

"I called old acquaintances. I solicited the writers I wanted," recalls Wieland. "I had some connections to writers through my publisher and through past experience as a fiction editor for the Warrior Review—a publication from the University of Alabama. George Garrett, a legend in the south, who has taught such writers as Kelly Cherry, submitted a piece. Having him on board legitimized our project. I was really awed by the response."

And the response was immense. Anne Beattie, a nationally recognized author, after being turned down by The New Yorker, donated her piece "In Irons" to the unknown journal in what Wieland calls "an act of faith." The New Yorker could pay $8,000; The Idaho Review could only offer five free copies. "In Irons," one of many works published, was the only Beattie piece that made the list of the top 100. Contributor Richard Bausch's atypical dialogue-based story, "Voices from the Other Room," now appears in his new hardback collection.

Contributors did not throw pocket change to the journal. Instead, they gave their best work.

Wieland, Assistant Editor Quinn Pritchard, and graduate assistant Tamara Shores spent fifteen months formatting the final presentation.

"A lot of journals—top journals—less represent a book rather than a catalogue. They lean towards something less wonderful looking," Wieland says of the neatly book bound Review. "I wanted something you could put on a shelf."

Critics notice even the cover. The physical appearance of the book has been called "handsome" and "elegant."

The second issue of The Idaho Review will arrive from the printer in late December. It will showcase the odd eclectic art of James Castle on a white glossy cover and eight color plates. The caliber of written submission parallels the quality of the first edition. In this edition, Alan Cheuse contributes.

"We want to keep up the momentum," says Wieland. "We hope to gradually gain more weight, reputation, and merit. Our goals—just to stick around, to be known as a place to be."

From the inaugural issue, and the quality of the second copy, the Idaho Review appears to have already reached that place.
Boston Pops will enliven holiday season, aid Toys for Tots

The Idaho Toys for Tots campaign, which reaches full throttle during the holiday months, will receive proceeds from the third annual Fidelity Investments Boston Pops Holiday Tour. Conductor Keith Lockhart brings the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra into the Boise State Pavilion at 8 p.m. on Friday, Dec. 3.

“We are thrilled to be associated with the Pavilion and one of the most prestigious events of the season,” says U.S. Marine Corps First Sergeant and Idaho Toys for Tots coordinator Keith Hobbs, through press materials. “The children of the Treasure Valley have many needs this time of year, and our goal is to brighten the holidays for as many as possible.”

Lockhart and the Pops will perform a variety of the season’s favorites, inviting the audience to join in for songs such as “Winter Wonderland,” “Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas” and “Jingle Bells.”

“One of my favorite moments during the holiday concerts is the sing-a-long,” says Lockhart. “There’s nothing like being surrounded by thousands of voices all singing ‘Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.’”

The orchestra will also celebrate the life of late American jazz great Duke Ellington with the “Peanut Brittle Brigade,” from his “Nutcracker (after Tchaikovsky)” and contemporary pieces by John Williams and Leroy Anderson.

“It’s immensely gratifying to know that we reach millions of Pops fans across the country through our television appearances during the summer and at holiday time,” remarks Lockhart. “But what’s even more thrilling for me is to bring the orchestra to America’s greatest cities and to share this live concert experience with our loyal fans in the Boise area.”

Singer and former Miss America, Susan Powell, will perform with the Boston Pops for the first time since 1993. She has starred in a number of stage productions over the years, including Die Fledermaus, Sweetie Todd and The Sounds of Rodgers and Hammerstein.

Toys For Tots contributions of new, unwrapped toys can be brought to the concert, or dropped off at Newschannel 7’s studios or any area fire station.

Tickets cost $15-$100 at all Select-A-Seat outlets or by phone at 426-1766.

Keith Lockhart leads the Boston Pops.

The colors of Montana come alive in Idaho

Jessica Holmes

Anne Appleby's art, at first look, appears flat and monotone. But focused lights unearth the depth in her single shade panels. Appleby overlaps coat after coat of pigment and wax (twenty to forty layers) over a plywood board until the color, as art critic Rick Newby commented, "starts to glow, to awaken your senses."

Appleby's work will remain on display at the Boise art museum through early March.

"Her art eludes reproduction," notes assistant curator Heather Ferrell, "The work has a subtle nuance. The more you look, the more you see the variety and depth of it."

Appleby's work stems from a 15-year apprenticeship with Ojibwa holy man Ed Barbeau. Barbeau taught Appleby something other art institutions did not—how to see. Barbeau asked Appleby, in one early lesson, to paint a wolf on a buffalo hide shield. With precision, she reproduced the image. "That's just a picture of a wolf," the Native American elder replied. "That's not a wolf," Appleby to strive to encapsulate the spirit of an object, not solely its physical aspect. She displays the essence through color. For instance, in a piece titled "River Birch," six square panels display the six basic colors Appleby finds in a birch tree. The viewer does not confront a representation of a tree, but instead looks into its core makeup.

Appleby delves further. She observes that an object in nature changes with season and time. That birch may look different in the hazy light of winter than on a May morning. She attempts to display not only the object, but the time frame of conception. The pieces on display in the museum, Coyote Meadow, August 7 and Along the Yellowstone Near Columbus, November 24 portray how significant the date was to the colors captured.

"The world is constantly moving and changing and reinventing itself," she remarks. "These are the moments I try to express through painting."

Each piece depicts the grasses, trees and flowers of Montana. Appleby's western influences make her work a fitting contribution to the Boise Art Museum's ongoing "Northwest Perspectives" exhibit.

The Boise Art Museum is open Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and weekends, noon-6 p.m. Admission is $4 for adults and $2 for students. The first Thursday of each month is free.
Dogma combines Catholicism with 'rubber poop monster'

It is safe to say that Dogma is unlike any other Hollywood movie. It defies categorization but Chris Rock, one of the stars in the film, came up with a fairly accurate attempt. “I saw it as Star Wars meets The Ten Commandments with a little Romeo and Juliet thrown in.” The Wizard of Oz would fit as well.

Dogma creates a mind-staggering mix of fantasy and reality. Celestial beings go hand-in-hand with demons and New Jersey dudes. Even God makes an appearance in the form of Alanis Morissette.

The protagonists are two fallen angels doomed to spend the rest of their eternal lives in Wisconsin. Ben Affleck and Matt Damon play the creatures. The duo returns to the screen after their memorable performance in Good Will Hunting. Bartleby and Loki find a possible loophole to re-enter heaven by passing through the gate of a church in New Jersey.

However, God is infallible. Since allowing the angels back into Heaven would prove God wrong, it would negate all of existence. Thus, mankind is in danger. But since only a human can save humanity, this lot falls to Bethany (Linda Fiorentino), a middle-aged Catholic woman who ironically works in an abortion clinic. Reluctantly, she follows the instructions and finds herself on the way to New Jersey to stop the angels, with the help of two highly unusual prophets, Jay and Silent Bob.

Rufus (played by Chris Rock), soon joins the group and introduces himself as the thirteenth apostle who was left out of the Bible for political reasons, and by the Muse (Salma Hayek), who currently works in a strip bar. When they reach New Jersey after an adventurous journey, the movie comes to its violent climax which decides the fate of the world.

When Dogma showed at the New York Film Festival earlier this year, the screening was accompanied by protests of religious groups which tried to stop its publication. They argued that the film ridicules every value of Catholicism, an unsurprising response for such a provocative movie.

Many of the celestial characters are drawn towards the ridiculous. The two fallen angels, about to be forgiven their own sins, become even more evil in their judgment of human sins than the Devil himself. The two prophets, more interested in sexual than heavenly pleasures, hardly qualify for this occupation in a biblical sense. Some of the supernatural characters give the movie a weird twist and don't really contribute to the plot.

Yet these beings can be seen as one of the several clues on how to approach this movie. Says director Kevin Smith (Mallrats, Chasing Amy): “This is a farce and a fantasy about the relationship with God. But all along I’ve thought, how seriously can you take a movie that has a rubber poop monster in it?” Above all, Dogma comes across as a comedy, but with serious undertones. Rufus offers one of its few, possibly didactic lines: “Religion should be about ideas, not about belief. In belief, the ideas become institutionalized and static, in other words: a dogma (“a religious doctrine formally stated”).”

Dogma is certain to receive mixed responses from the audience. Yet, for the moviegoer the best and maybe only way to enjoy this movie seems simple: don’t take religion too literally, or yourself too seriously.
To the university community:

In three and a half years as faculty advisor of The Arbiter, I have never asked for personal space in this newspaper. Recent events have led me to request an exception.

Years ago my father, an Auschwitz survivor, gave testimony and other evidence at the war crimes of Adolf Eichmann, a particularly notorious member of the Nazi death machine. Evidently there's some sort of network out there because, as a direct result, I have been subject to various forms of death threats in every community I've ever lived in, except for supposedly red-necky, Aryan Nation-dominated Boise, Idaho.

Therefore the recent spate of death threats, addressed to the editor and staff of The Arbiter, and the outright theft of copies of the last issue, represent far more than a personal irony. I take them as an outright insult to the memory of my parents, and of the other immediate family members I lost to the Holocaust.

If you have any shred of decency about you, surrender yourselves immediately-right this minute-to the proper authorities for the treatment or punishment you deserve. By employing these underhanded, outright Fascistic tactics, you have surrendered the moral high ground right back to pro-Nazi sympathizers, confirming some of their worst ethnic stereotypes and blurring the ethical lines between you and them almost entirely.

Holocaust deniers can be refuted; your cowardice can not. Identify yourselves to the public and accept full responsibility for your actions. Any less offends those in my family who, because of criminal intolerance, can no longer speak for themselves.

Don't label

Many thanks to Lesleigh Owen for publicly inviting me to reexamine the politics of gender and sexuality. I believe I'll publicly respond. Before I go around shouting "Gay is beautiful," I've got a few questions of my own.

Unlike "Madame Les," I'll leave out the sarcasm and insults to show that my questions are sincere.

1) Why is it that if I say, "Support groups treating manic depressives report long-term success rates of 40 to 50 percent," homosexuals say, "Hey, cool! Hopefully medical science will make those figures even better some day!" But if I say, "Documented results are similar for treating homosexuality," those same people stand up and scream, "That's a dirty lie! 'Gay' can't be cured!"

2) Should mankind be forced to redefine "family" and "marriage," or to alter politics and religion based on the weak argument, "I feel that way"? (Try that one in a court of law someday. "Yes, your honor, I set fire to Mrs. Floomer's cologne. But it's OK, sir. I felt like it."

3) Why, if I simply state that I believe homosexuals are wrong, do seemingly rational people start pointing fingers and blathering unfounded cliches about hate and homophobia? Why would someone pretend there's something intellectually superior about marching in a homosexual parade, or socially inferior about not doing so? What makes my view less valid?

4) Explain the following: if I feel an urge to mutilate my own body, I'm labeled "masochist" and forcibly institutionalized. If I feel a powerful psychological urge to strip naked across the field during a football game, people don't say, "What a beautiful expression of self!" No, they say, "Ha! What a freak! Call security!"] If I act on a sexual urge with a consenting 16 year old (eight years younger than I), you would label me "pervert" and have me jailed. (Ironically, if that 16 year old declared a same-gender sexual attraction, you would say, "Great! Don't fight it. Nothing wrong there either.

Even though your initial argument was, "Consent doesn't matter, you creep! The child didn't know any better!"

Why? Why are we constantly being told a homosexual urge is good and proper, while these other urges are so vile? If an urge comes from within, isn't that who I am?

5) I could go about insisting that I'm black. "Ever since I was nine," I would say, "I've known that I'm actually black. (And I want my political minority favors, damnit!) Wouldn't my claim be just as substantial as the homosexuals' claim of distinction? No, you idiot! You would tell me, "You have no genetic or ancestral claim to that group! Besides, I can plainly see that nature made you white!"

Could I just as plainly see that nature gave you specific organs which only exist for procreation, and that it seems unlikely that nature intends you to ignore them by pursuing a different lifestyle? Now, please don't misunderstand: If it's your desire to be a homosexual, great. Go ahead. I probably do things you don't approve of. But you'll notice I don't go about arrogantly proclaiming you must agree with me to be "enlightened!"

"The Revisionist" does not belong in a college newspaper

To my great dismay, The Arbiter has added and abetted the cause of the Aryan Nations, White Supremacist, Nazi cause by including as a middle insert "The Revisionist: A Journal of Independent Thought" in the Nov. 17 issue. Since the paper was hand delivered to my office by Arbiter staff, I must assume that the decision to willfully distribute this piece of racist garbage to BSU students and faculty was an official one. I abhor the fact that student and state funds were spent in the form of staff payroll time spent inserting the "journal"—to advance a cause that denies the Holocaust and promotes the killing of Jews at the regional, national, and world-wide levels as a defensible act of "race purification." Furthermore, the timing of the insert could not be more inconsistent and disrespectful to those of the Jewish faith, as we approach the beginning of the celebration of "light—Chanukah. The insult is double at an institution such as BSU which frequently crosses the line between the division of... church and state by promoting “Christmas” concerts and the “Christmas” holiday to the exclusion of all other cultural and religious practices.

I hope that the person who made this ridiculous decision will be held accountable in some form or fashion. It’s difficult enough to be a minority at this institution. In the face of institutional support of prejudice—and believe me, this is—it’s almost impossible.

Shame on you. I am outraged, dismayed, and insulted by this disgraceful act of prejudice.

Arbiter displayed immaturity in decision

The Nov. 17 issue of the Boise State University’s campus newspaper, The Arbiter, contained an insert of the highly racist and propagandistic publication, “The Revisionist.” This shocking fact was the result of a decision taken by editor of The Arbiter, Erica Hill. As she explains it in her note from the editor, the decision to publish this trash is the result of her moral dilemma of whether or not to “abridge free speech.”

Erica Hill refused to publish “based on obscenity laws and a responsibility I believe a newspaper must have to their readers!! I am speechless. Refresh me on the meaning of hypocrisy.

Also, it is now due to this skewed view of a newspaper’s responsibilities toward its readers that “The Revisionist” is allowed to spread its evil message around the campus. I have never seen or read anything so obscene in my life, and I am outraged by the immaturity of The Arbiter staff to argue this as a case of freedom of the speech. I don’t see how this applies in this matter, at what I understand from speaking to the manager, this was a paid advertisement and could therefore have been refused by The Arbiter without it being censorship.

Maybe every editor in chief for a college newspaper feels that they must create their own little stir on First Amendment rights. The immaturity displayed by the entire staff to allow this to happen shows such a poor and ignorant understanding of the gravity of this issue that I feel that they should no longer continue at their jobs. As a foreign student from a European country I can assure you that in Europe this would not be acceptable behavior from a student newspaper at a university. For obvious reasons these things are taken very seriously in Europe today. Racism, neo-Nazi or revisionism are issues far too destructive to be taken lightly. Wherever they stick up their evil heads they must be dealt with and cannot, MUST NOT be tolerated. A mere apology or weak explanation that “we do not support the beliefs of this group” is not enough. It is our duty, contrary to what Erica Hill and her staff seems to think, to refuse to partake in any assistance to groups like these.

We must in every instance distance ourselves from this kind of propaganda. We must be responsible and deal with racism before it gets a foothold among students on campuses or anywhere in society. The Holocaust is not just a thing of the past to be dismissed without the realization that it is living history. There are people among us for whom it is very much the reality that they still have no deal with in their everyday lives. There are people who have no families due to the atrocities committed during WWII. We cannot tolerate our campus newspaper spreading Revisionist lies at BSU. This is a sacred issue, not one to choose for a pet project of free speech for a college newspaper.

Cecilia LaFquist Traum, Boise Idaho

Decision was not a free speech issue

The naked woman on the cover of The Arbiter last year did not offend me. The thought of an advertisement seeking porn actors seems more comical than obscene, and also does not offend me. “The Revisionist” manifesto falling out of a copy of The Arbiter as I sat down with my morning coffee offended me. In fact, it makes me feel ill and pissed me off.

What disgusts me further is your fake nobility insisting that this is a free speech/First Amendment issue. You yourself admit to “censoring” an ad seeking actors in a porn movie. Is it more evil that a BSU student (“sell” his/her body) than believe the lies of “The Revisionist?” Did you even read The Revisionist? Do you understand the lies within and the pain those lies can cause? Do you understand the gravity of the role you played in Defining free speech

The latest outrage by the Arbiter (of three within about a year, by my count) can't be silently endured.

"Free speech" means that the government can't tell you what to print, or not to print. As editor you shape the product as you see fit, given the often subtle pressures from your readership, and the ultimately determinant one of your boss — the only person who can demand specific content.

"Free speech" does not give advertisers a right to space in any publication they want, it does not give reporters and essayists the right to say exactly what they want, and it does not require you to publish this or any other letter. That's all up to you — the editor within parameters established ultimately by the ownership.

It wasn't about any body's free speech but yours, using the limitless test of your knowledge and values. You turned down an ad offering students an employment opportunity with the pornography industry — you would not in any way be complicit with it. An ad (masquerading as a refereed journal, no less) trying to evangelize a denial of the historical reality of the murder of six million human beings didn't offend you — at least not as much.

I'm forced to offer the benefit of the doubt — that your decision reflected less your values than your lack of knowledge. If so, in the future please educate yourself. A single phone call or trip to the library would have enabled you to reach an informed decision based on the nature of the group behind this insert. Perhaps your faculty advisor could have been of assistance in this regard.

I can't really blame you personally — there's plenty of Holocaust denial to go around. Most know about the camps and ovens, but overlook the attempt to squeeze every last second of labor out of the Jews (and Gypsies and homosexuals and political dissidents) before murdering them. Most downplay that every major German corporation availed itself of Jewish slave labor, and were only too happy to profit from munitions contracts. Few in the UK know that corporations like Ford also used Jewish slave labor and contracted with the Nazi military. Few know that the US State Department covered up its knowledge of the Holocaust for months and had long impeded the efforts of Jews to save Europe. So I'm not too surprised if you didn't understand the nature of the Holocaust denial industry as it related to the well-financed, well-organized, and international neo-Nazi movement.

I do applaud your interest in journalism. Providing you have now learned the difference between free speech and hate speech, I wish you every success.

Martin Orr Sociology

Revisionist insert was editorial prerogative, not free speech

I have not read the apparently inflammatory insert from your paper last week and I do not wish to comment on its contents. I do, however, take exception to your claim that it would have been an "abridgment of free speech" to "censor" the presentation of this material.

As you know, the First Amendment to the United States Constitution states: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

First of all, accepting payment from the publishers of "The Revisionist" in exchange for distribution of their publication is clearly NOT a constitutional issue, but rather a commercial one.

Secondly, that which you choose to call "censorship," many others, who also cherish the First Amendment, would call good editing.

Your assertion that it would have been "hypocritical" to refuse to include Mr. Brewer's material is most baffling. It's your job to make decisions about content, is it not? (Surely, you don't publish every piece of writing that is submitted to you.) I would hope you also consider it your responsibility to defend your choices, or, if you feel a mistake has been made on your part, to redress your actions. If you insist on standing by the claim that free speech was prohibited by your distribution of this material, I believe you owe your readers an explanation of how the First Amendment would have been threatened if you had decided against including it.

As an editor you are responsible for what is presented in your publication, including paid advertisements. You purvey a certain point of view which is manifest in the decisions you make about what should be included and what should not. No paper is entirely objective, nor should it be. When you inserted "The Revisionist," you exercised your editorial prerogative, a privilege and responsibility that all your readers hopefully recognize and respect. Understand, however, that in so doing, you endorsed its content.

You do journalism and the principles of free speech a grave disservice by using a hyperbolic claim of defense of free speech as a shield to deflect honest criticism about a questionable editorial decision.

Respectfully,

William Coffey
A monstrous thought, expressed, rebuffed, indeed slain arises, inevitably phoenix-like from the ashes to do battle with humans anew. This has been the course throughout the ages. Thus it will be always until nuclear, chemical, biological or genetic warfare parts us from the history of this place.

For me, personally, I would prefer to do battle with the monsters. But my life has not been one of pacubulum. Until such time as we all agree to take a vow of intellectual silence—a monstrous thought that—I rejoice when a monster appears. With each reappearance I know my enemy more fully. With each appearance I examine: my personal monsters more critically

The world lies knee-deep in the corpses the monsters have created. Now, with the advanced technology of a value-free science we may all become corpses. The monsters loose on the land unanswered and the monsters residing quietly behind the masks conspire to make us all corpses. Not a day passes I do not fancy we are all already corpses awaiting the final solution of a terrible monstrous thought to reduce us to ashes.

Therefore stand up BSU. Make your voice heard. Stand for the monsters that we set to be free. We must battle the monsters which are set forth by our freedom. Give voice to your horrors, your fears, your petty self-interest; a lifetime of oppression has not made me one less ready to engage the battle.

Don’t be afraid of this little Nazi advertisement. We owe the big lie tellers for showing us, in the ovens of Dachau and on the sands of Normandy beach, the monstrous power of the lie and the true power to destroy the liars. Unfurl your tongues. There are liars in our midst and liars do your damnedest.

Do not kill free speech—rejoice in it, encourage it. Sacred combat springs forth through it.

John Threet

Arbiter editor now accomplice to anti-semitism

I am astounded by and outraged at your decision to distribute the anti-Semitic “The Revisionist” in the Nov. 17 Arbiter. Your decision was not a matter of free speech but instead an ignorant and purposeful decision to promote the ideology of hate. The fact that you would reject advertisements soliciting students to act in a porn movie, allegedly because you recall at pornography, would you not also recall at Holocaust denial? While your decisions may have allowed you to portray yourself as a defender of the student body, these same decisions have made you an accomplice to anti-Semitism.

As students at an institution of higher learning one would expect that, unlike other hate mongers in Idaho and elsewhere, you and your staff would have chosen to take the moral high ground on such an issue. But you have sunk to the same level as those groups who promote intolerance and malevolence, and you have assisted in the furtherance on Idaho’s negative reputation as a haven for racists and anti-Semites.

Finally, as a Jewish faculty member with 25 years of service to BSU, much of whose family perished in Auschwitz, I take your decision, made in the midst of the Table Rock cross controversy, to be a personal attack on me as well as on other Jewish faculty, students and staff. I am embarrassed and ashamed to think that we belong to the same academic community.

To Fake or Not to Fake

As fuel for my rant, I posed some related questions to several friends and coworkers.

According to a 1997 Cosmo poll, fifty-six percent of women and forty percent of men report faking as a necessary evil. Of the nine (all heterosexual, in keeping with the theme) people I interviewed or polled, five agreed, although not one of the seven women and two men I interrogated personally confirmed or denied any such activity, of course.

First, I asked them whether they thought “It’s okay/not okay for women to fake orgasms.” Admitting I held my breath, sat forward in my chair and waited for someone to echo the jaunty chauvinism saturating the Cosmo article: “Bottom line,” one of its male interviewees sniffed, “If I’m going to make every effort to please someone, I expect a healthy amount of appreciation in return — genuine or not.” Instead of such delusional sexism, all my “yes” people quoted wimpy answers like, “it depends on the situation” or “faking shouldn’t matter if partners don’t care about one another.” Two of the five blamed the phenomenon on such yawnsers as lack of time or as a ploy to call a halt to the whole sweaty mess.

The naysayers generally agreed that not only do “fau-gasms” (a term quaintly coined by Cosmo, by the way) not flatter a partner’s ego but also insult his intelligence. Besides, no one actually said that, but they could have.

Throughout these interviews, a handful of unasked questions kept me wriggling in my seat, chewing on my responses. Why, I wanted to know, do so many women feel compelled to cater to their partners’ egos? How have female orgasms become so enmeshed with the male ego? Why should we perceive a woman’s lack of climax as an egregious transgression against her male partner’s sexual identity?

Most importantly, when the hell did we become so obsessed with the Big Of Sure, most of us get a kick out of the petit mort, but does seven seconds of pleasure really warrant such religious media and interpersonal devotion? Sex has become a sport only concerned with its touchdowns.

Score

One of my interviewees described her partner’s inability to “admit defeat,” “I could handle all his Are you close?, but one time since I told him I hadn’t one at all, he smiled and said, ‘Are you sure?’ I said, ‘Yeah, I’m completely sure,’ but he insisted I had to believe him, so I said back all sweetly, ‘Well, I didn’t.’ He still didn’t give up.” People don’t make sounds like that unless they climax. “Well, it’s my body,” I said, ‘and I think I know’

Men, we know that the pressure to satisfy yourself and us clings to your back like a joyriding monkey. We know you feel just as much pressure to ensure our sexual fulfillment is enough” or “not at all” and from your studied nonchalance when we tell you it just didn’t happen for us. It’s not about men from Mars or women as succubae; it’s simply the offspring of our culture’s message to the male sex from day one: “Now, someday, you boys will discover six-inch wands with magical powers of pleasure and self-definition. Make sure you use them well and always remember: you’re not a real man if waving your wand doesn’t produce spectacular fireworks. Anybody for a cookie?”

Are ya close? Do you feel a laugh just itching to scream forth?

That said, allow me to let you in on a little tip of our own. Any question that involves the words “Did you?” makes us want to grapple our teeth and yank our thatches of hair (preferably not our own). I can’t speak for all women, but who wouldn’t feel pressured to pull the Big Of Sure in the middle of such a pop quiz? Trust me, when we get there, we’ll let you know.

How to help nip the urge to fake: 1. Keep all inner-bedroom, pinpas-scrubbed, and 2. Explore the pleasure lying beyond the boundaries of missionary sex. Good sex simply doesn’t start and stop with coitus.

The Big Of Sure isn’t a bad place to visit, but our obsession with getting there initially keeps us from experiencing the greater rewards of satisfaction possible. Consider say
Aquarius: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Having an exchange student in your home to return unwanted gifts is an abuse of your property. Don’t wear that tight dress continue to eliminate the subtle, poignantly poignant notions from your gifted work.

Aries: (Mar. 21-Apr. 19) This week I decided to consult with the stars to find out the safe topics people can still make fun of in the United States and we came up with—pedestrians, Virgos, and drug dealers— hut let’s be honest; it’s no fun to make light of drug dealers.

Taurus: (Apr. 20-May 20) Your answering machine message needs to be changed. Incorporate the words— splendid, happy holidays, Table-rock and Cher at least once.

Gemini: (May 21-June 21) The next millennium will require many new exciting ideas. Become a trend setter. Pork is your color.

Cancer: (June 22-July 22) If you could be a superhero would you wear the tightest Exercise daily? Defeat Jerry Springer.

Leo: (July 23-Aug. 22) Someday you’ll be old and wrinkled so live it up now.

Virgo: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) This week I decided to consult with the stars to find out the safe topics people can still make fun of in the United States and we came up with—pedestrians, Virgos, and drug dealers— but let’s be honest; it’s no fun to make light of drug dealers.

Libra: (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) All this week call AT&T 00 info and ask them what to get your uncle Buster for Christmas.

Scorpio: (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) If a woodchuck could chuck wood would he get minimum wage? Become a philosopher this week.

Sagittarius: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Your editor will continue to eliminate the subtle, poignantly poignant notions from your gifted work.

Capricorn: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Signal space aliens from the roof of your house with a flashlight this week. Tell them Mark is sorry for wrecking the car.
