The move by state lawmakers to oversee programming, decisions by IPTV amounts to censorship in its worst form. When a station designed to facilitate discussion outside the tyranny of the majority opinion is silenced, we all suffer.

But enough about my opinion. Here are a few quotes centered around this delicate issue of free speech and freedom of the press:

"Government enforced silence is more dangerous to our nation than thousands of unregulated voices," James S Hanger, president of Wisconsin Manufacturers and Commerce, 1999.

"The people, in delegating authority, do not give their public servants the right to decide what is good for the people to know and what is not good for them to know." Texas Public Information Act, 1973.

"Banning ugly ideas doesn't make them go away; it just drives them into a desperate darkness." Robert Leger, editorial page editor, Springfield, Mo. News Leader, 1999.

"If liberty means anything at all, it means the right to tell people what they do not want to hear." George Orwell, English novelist, 1945.

"The true test of any nation's commitment to freedom lies in its ability to protect unpopular expression." John Corzine, Jr., US representative (D-NJ), 1999.

Attempted "midnight appointments" sends Bott/Brown administration out with a bang

Sean Hayes

With only a week left in office, ASBSU Vice President Mike Brown stunned some senators and President Matt Bott by attempting to fill two empty senator-at-large seats with appointees. Brown chose departing College of Education Senator Joel Spring and ASBSU Personnel Selection Director Josh Beebe, who earlier this month lost in a bid to capture the executive seat.

Vice President-elect Rachel Wheatley was among those shocked by the eleventh hour decisions. She likened the move to John Adams' infamous "midnight appointments," in which—just a short time before the former president's term was to end—he packed the Supreme Court with his choice of candidates. Wheatley felt since she will be leading Senate in a few weeks, particularly through approval of her and President-elect Nate Peterson's budget, that her administration should have the voice in selecting candidates for the open seats if appointments are to be made.

Beebe told Senate during a hearing to approve the two appointments that he in fact had two applications for the open positions waiting on his desk. Also, Beebe claims he knew of at least one other candidate—Brooke Baldwin, who ran an unsuccessful college senator election—interested in the position.

Baldwin was among those upset with Brown's attempt. "That really frustrated me," she says. "I've been talking to people and they said that they were going to do interviews next week so I thought I had time to get a good application in."

The vacant seats have been open for over a month now. Olias Muchow, who won a seat in the senator-at-large elections last fall, was deemed ineligible to serve on Senate and impeached several months later. Missy Asher resigned to shift her focus back to school and family. Since that time the seats have remained open.

"Matt observes the procedure of things. He's very professional," says Thompson. "It would be out of this world for Matt to do anything like that."

Brown told Senate that the positions typically stay vacant for only about two weeks, and that it is then the prerogative of the executive branch to appoint Senators. Bob Bell added that appointing new senators would serve the interest of time, in creating a full body to review legislation.

Some members of Senate and the gallery were unmoved by this explanation. They felt that Beebe and Spring should submit applications and go through the interview process. A motion passed that postponed the decision until Tuesday, with hopes that more applications could be reviewed. It was unclear at press time if Beebe could review the applications, as it was unclear at press time if Beebe was leading Senate.

Perhaps none were more surprised by Brown's attempt than Bott, who was out of town at a State Board of Education meeting. When he arrived back at Boise State and learned the news, he said he was "frustrated and furious."

"'Matt observes the procedure of things. He's very professional,' says Thompson. 'It would be out of this world for Matt to do anything like that.'"

Jamie Thompson, who serves as an officer on the Student Union Board of Governors and enjoys close ties with Bott, felt that this represented a decision Bott would not have made.

"Matt observes the procedure of things. He's very professional," says Thompson. "It would be out of this world for Matt to do anything like that."

As Bott enters his last week in office, questions remain to be answered. Last year, the Senate lost a prominent resignee, reportedly because of his disappointment in the administration's choice of appointments. With decisions likely to be made Tuesday afternoon after press time, The Arbiter will detail the conclusion of this story next week.
Code of student dos and don'ts gets facelift

What happens if a BSU student gets caught cheating? What actions can a dorm resident take about a reoccurring noise complaint? Can a student do anything if they feel discriminated against because of their sexual preference? The answers to all these questions lie in the code of Student Policies and Procedures.

A group of five BSU faculty members has just proposed a new and updated version of these guidelines. "The current policies which appear in the student handbook don't follow a constant format and are often difficult to navigate through," explains Richard Rapp, associate vice president of student affairs. Although many guidelines remain the same, procedures now have a definite path. Two important sections of the Policies and Procedures includes a Student Bill of Rights and a Student Code of Conduct. It also contains a portion addressing complaint and hearing procedures, conduct sanctions along with the creation of conduct boards. An entire section is devoted to sanctions imposed for alcoholic beverage violations.

Vice President of Student Affairs Peg Blake felt the policies should be brought up to date, comments Rapp. She appointed a group to examine the document and offer revisions.

The proposal was presented to the ASBSU Senate April 18. The group is asking the student government as well as other organizations on campus for suggestions. After this, the new version will be finalized in the handbook.

One proposed change would mean violations or complaints will be brought to a conduct board instead of the ASBSU judiciary. Also, students would have only one chance to appeal a decision, instead of three as they do currently.

Rapp explains that this simplifies the process. Presently the handbook allocates the same duties to several different bodies. Now responsibilities concerning student conduct are clearly outlined, he says.

Another revision established the actions a faculty member should take when handling academic dishonesty. It also describes what a student may do to write an appeal and who will examine the claim.

For more information about the proposed versions of the Student Policies and Procedures contact Richard Rapp at 426-1747, rappr@boisestate.edu or an ASBSU Senator.

State Board of Education approves fee hike for BSU, students face paying seven percent more

Fees for part-time students will increase from $114.75 to $124.70 per credit. The $84 full-time fee increase per semester includes $54 for general university operations, $5 for intercollegiate athletics, $7 for the student recreation program, $6 for Student Union operations, $2 each for the outdoor program, marching band and lecture series, $1.50 for the Children's Center and $1 for the Arbiter student newspaper and volunteer services program. The computer lab fee increased $2.50.

Senators question VSB’s proposal to pay volunteers

When the Volunteer Services Board asked for a fee hike earlier this year in order to provide service awards for its coordinators, it raised a few eyebrows. When current director Eric Elliot and next year’s head Jillana Slocum were on hand at ASBSU Senate to introduce next year’s missions and announce the success of their fee proposal, some student leaders were not impressed.

“Does this mean you’ll now be called the Paid Volunteer Services Board?” asked Senator Trevor Irish.

Slocum responds that some people get tripped up by the word “volunteer,” and should focus on the “services board” portion of its title. She says it is the job of the board to facilitate and provide opportunities for students to volunteer, not necessarily to serve as volunteers themselves. Besides, she says, the award will run in the neighborhood of $100 a month, so they are “still basically volunteers.”

One problem the organization has had in the past was retaining activity coordinators. The scant amount of office hours was not always enough to put in the amount of work needed to plan an activity. With the new awards, Slocum says, office hours for event planners will now be tripled.

VSB also seeks more respect from the university at large, and hopes to be recognized alongside groups such as the Student Programs Board. Slocum says that VSB hovers in a nether-region between club and university-sponsored organization. For one thing, the group has to re-apply for office space each year. While the group enjoys some benefits clubs get and some that groups like SPB get, they are still frozen out of others.

Just a few years ago President Clinton and Colin Powell were blasted for trying to implement mandatory volunteerism. It seems BSU is taking another circuitous procedure toward getting busy students to freely give up their time.

Amy Hepworth, a Boise State student, is the 1999-2000 recipient of Boise State University’s annual Golden Key National Honor Society Undergraduate Scholarship.

Hepworth, majoring in English with a writing emphasis, earning a minor in political science, carries a 4.0 grade point average. She serves as the vice president of the English Majors Association, treasurer of the English Majors Association, treasurer of the Boise State Writers Guild, and editor-in-chief of The CommonsTater, the English major newsletter.

Golden Key National Honor Society awards two scholarships annually to each of its 185 college and university chapters across the United States, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Australia, Canada, Malaysia and New Zealand.

The scholarship is awarded to the outstanding junior and senior major of the chapter based on overall academic performance, honors and awards, research, leadership, campus and community activities, and work commitments.

When this year’s projected 1,400 graduates receive their diplomas, they will be in a two-line format, meaning that they will move through the line about twice as quickly as the one-student-at-a-time method the university has used in the past.

Before the ceremony, graduates will line up in the auxiliary gym and the Student Union Building. The stage party and dean will walk into the Pavilion, followed by the graduates.

In addition, video screens will be used for the first time to show the graduates receiving their diplomas at the rate of one name every two seconds.

After the ceremony, faculty members will line up and graduates will march, surrounded by faculty members lined up on both sides, toward the SUB. Someone will ring the bell by the Opaline School during this honor march.

“It’s kind of the dawn of a new age,” says Margene Muller, who is coordinating the ceremony.

Graduation ceremonies are scheduled for 2 p.m. on Saturday, May 13, in the Pavilion.

Real deal update: Baseball at Boise State

Two weeks ago, this column reported that Boise State does not have a baseball team because the university, as a public institution, needs to try to maintain gender equity.

However, Joel Spring reminds us that Boise State does support a club baseball team, which competes with other Big Sky Conference teams.

The team’s season has already begun. Last weekend, they played Eastern Washington in Cheney, Wash., and this weekend they take on Montana State at Bozeman, Mont. This year’s Big Sky tournament will take place in Boise on May 6-7.

The team has about 20 players, all from Boise State.

The art department has changed radically in the last five years because the retiring faculty is being replaced by young visionary faculty who want to initiate changes," says Gary Rosine, professor of art and chair of the art department. Rosine is well qualified to administer the department, a position he has occupied for four years. He holds an MFA in painting and a Ph.D in art philosophy.

"I really like being of service to others," Rosine says. "I'll probably die at this desk," he adds with a grin.

The department just marked its first year of success in its art gallery located in the Hemingway Center. Works of art by students, faculty and visiting artists are displayed there. Richard Young, the curator, coordinates these showings to make them interesting. Presentations include exhibitions of book art put on by English professor Tom Trusky as well as organ recitals sponsored by the music department.

Rosine says the State Board of Education just approved his department's expanded art history program. "It's the only one in Idaho; there's one at the University of Washington; and there may be one at the University of Oregon," says Rosine. "But that's it in the Pacific Northwest."

The department also added a new state-of-the-art digital photography lab to its string of classrooms located in the liberal arts building. The facilities planning committee approved it as an addition to the department's technological advancement.

Art professor George Roberts gives national workshops on non-toxic printmaking, a process he developed at the campus school art complex.

"He's making quite a name for himself," says Rosine. The new printmaking process offers a safer and more versatile printmaking tool.

Besides the liberal arts and campus school locations, professor Jim Buddy teaches ceramics in the art annex at the corner of Belmont and Vermont.

The department offered its first graduate programs two years ago. It consists of an MA in art education and an MFA in studio arts. The areas include painting, drawing, printmaking and ceramics. According to Rosine, the department plans on implementing an MFA program in metals next year. That will be followed by implementation of MFA programs in sculpture and photography.

"We've got our first two graduates in the master's program this semester," art professor Jim Blankenship proudly notes. There are two more students waiting, two have completed the necessary art show, two have been approved for final thesis, and two are still going through the program. "We just accepted four more students in the program," Rosine says. The review consists of an application for graduate work. "On the basis of the review," says Rosine, "we accepted two of 12, and two on provisional status, for a total of four." Provisional status means there are a few elements missing from their portfolios.

According to Rosine, a top priority is to build a new art building, a project on the list to be funded by private rather than public funds. "If there is anyone out there with deep pockets and an interest in the arts, we'd love to hear from them," says Rosine.

The strength of the school lies in its staff, which consists of 24 faculty and 15 adjunct faculty serving about 600 students.

Staff hired within the last couple of years include Stephanie Bacon, graphic design, whose art has been exhibited at Boone State College, N.C.; Bill Carman, illustration, whose art has been exhibited in Salt Lake City and Los Angeles; Lisa Heer, art history, who has received fellowships from Ireland, England and UCLA; Karen Kosasa, painting, whose art has been exhibited in Bellevue, Wash.; Larry McNeill, photography, whose art has been exhibited in Santa Fe, N.M., Vancouver, B.C. and Hamilton, Ontario; Lee Ann Turner, art history, who has a chapter printed in a national art text; and Francis Fox, sculpture, whose exhibit has appeared twice at the University of Wyoming Art Museum, Cheyenne.

"We have a very diverse faculty that teaches a wide range of disciplines with differing aesthetic ideologies," says Rosine. "What that means is we have diversity," he adds. "We can take students from any area of interest and our staff can address their needs."

Rosine says that a philosophical approach to art focuses upon diversity from ideological, gender, ethnic and technical standpoints.

"Like any good university, I believe we should promote diversity in all these areas," says Rosine. "We've got to be there. That is our vision."

Rosine exemplifies the dedication and nurturing qualities embraced by the art department faculty. "I really like being of service to others," he says. "I'll probably die at this desk," he adds with a grin.
Every vote counted in the ASBSU elections, except 400 of them

Sean Hayes news writer

Kate Sullins was uncertain of the procedure for writing in candidates. Hoping to cast a vote for write-in Brooke Baldwin, she asked a poll worker how to. He reportedly told her to write all her write-in candidates on the ballot. This led Sullins to believe that she could vote for more than one candidate. She also wrote in Jenni Plewa’s name for the College of Education. Consequently, her vote and nearly 400 others were void.

Sullins was not alone in her confusion about writing in candidates. Though officials say there were not many of students this year writing in Mickey Mouse or Tonya Harding, there were a lot of votes for multiple tickets. Angela Babcock, a member of the election board, says she often saw write-in candidates alongside votes for other senate positions. Babcock said it was made clear on the ballot and underlined that students were only supposed to vote for one candidate. However, some students evidently thought that this

The main problem however, Babcock says, is that students simply “did not know how to vote.”

Baldwin, a write-in candidate in an unsuccessful bid to represent the College of Social Science and Public Affairs, felt the process could have been easier. What particularly irked her was that the names of two who had dropped out of the race remained on the ballots.

“I felt that these were votes wasted, because clearly somebody could have punched them in,” says Baldwin. Walizada responds that it was too late to have these names taken off the ballots. She says that the signs posted nearby the booths listing candidates and platforms stipulated that these candidates had dropped out. Still, she acknowledges that the two got a few votes.

Baldwin was also upset at the amount of confusion surrounding the vote for a write-in. She says that some stations did not even have pens, and that instructions given on the process were confusing and vague.

Walizada says these names cannot be listed, according to the ASBSU election code. She points out that write-ins have to work that much harder to ensure that students remember their names, and are compelled to brave all odds and write them down. She says her poll workers were given sheets on which to write the names, and instructed to tell students the proper voting procedures.

While only two candidates had anything to gain from the lost votes, the large amount of missing votes may have swung the election to either Baldwin or her other competitor in the college, Nick Adams.

Matt Vanderboegh, the victor in the college election, bested Adams by about 100 votes and Baldwin by nearly twice that.
Dean receives awards for work with Hispanic youth

John Jensen, associate dean for the College of Education at Boise State University, who will retire this summer, was recently honored by two organizations in separate ceremonies for his work with Hispanic youths in Idaho.

In March, Jensen was recognized by the National HEP and CAMP Association for his "outstanding years of service upon his retirement" as director of the Boise State College of Education's High School Equivalency Program and College Assistance Migrant Program and as an officer of the national association. He received the prize at the 32nd National Migrant Education Conference in San Diego.

"Dr. John Jensen led our association through the most difficult times in our history. And he did it with hard work, and he did it with class," Loida Velazquez, president of the National HEP and CAMP Association, said during the ceremony honoring Jensen. "As he gets ready to retire, we know that we are going to miss him, and we want to recognize his contributions to our organization, ... in recognition for his outstanding services to the HEP and CAMP Association."

In addition, Jensen received the Whitney M. Young Jr. Service Award from the Ore-Idaho Council of the Boy Scouts of America for his work in the Boy Scouts of America for his work in the youth organization's "Scoutreach" program, which seeks to promote Boy Scout membership among minority and underprivileged youths. Jensen was cited for his work with scouts, many of whom are Hispanic, in Weiser, Nampa, Caldwell and Ontario. The Whitney M. Young Service Award, named in honor of the civil rights activist, honors scouting leaders for "unsurpassed service to the youth of America." Jensen received the honor at the Ore-Ida Council's annual recognition dinner last month.

Jensen, a resident of Kuna, joined Boise State in 1969. He taught as a professor of foundations, technology and secondary education in the College of Education and served for the last 12 years as director of the Center for Multicultural and Educational Opportunities, which administers Boise State's High School Equivalency Program and College Assistance Migrant Program. He has served as interim associate dean since 1998.

BSU program in Vietnam gets funding

Boise State will likely receive $700,000 to continue its work in the business school at Hanoi, Vietnam's National Economics University. The university has been working to develop a business college that allows people from Vietnam to earn MBA degrees.

In an informal April 9 e-mail, Sen. Mike Crapo's office received informal word from the United States Agency for International Development that it will fund the program in fiscal year 2000.

"It's good news for this year, and promising for next year and the years to come," says Chris Bailey, Crapo's deputy press secretary.

Boise State requested about $700,000 for this year and $2,300,000 for next year to go toward the program. The status of next year's funds remains up in the air.

"This will get us started, but we need to get the rest of it," says Boise State professor Nancy Napier, the overall project manager of Boise State's Vietnam program. "We've got a $3 million project, and that's what we'll need."

Original funding for the program came from Sweden, which provided the venture $7 million over seven years. That revenue has dried up, and the business school cannot yet sustain itself.

Since the Vietnamese government is unable to provide substantial support for the program, Boise State hopes to make it self-sustaining over the next two years.

The Senate Foreign Operations and Appropriations Bill for fiscal year 2000 requested that USAID provide up to $3 million for the program.

However, USAID receives more funding requests than actual funds, and the status of the money has been in question. Earlier this year USAID had indicated it would not be able to support the venture.

And, well into fiscal year 2000, the university still doesn't know when the money will become available and work on the project will actually begin.

"The funding is in place. It's just now just working out the details of the proposal," says John Franden, executive assistant to Boise State President Charles Ruch.

"I don't see how they will be able to get us started by June if we still haven't submitted a formal proposal," says Boise State professor Nancy Napier, the overall project manager of Boise State's Vietnam program.

"I think we're looking at mid-summer before something happens," she says.

USAID Press Officer Gabrielle Bushman reports that the grant is under discussion, but the agency cannot comment further.

Over the next three years Boise State's work focuses on three areas of emphasis. First, the university wants to provide development opportunities for the faculty of the business school, including internships, visits to conferences and research grants.

Boise State also hopes to help the business school build networks with universities and companies throughout Vietnam and the world.

And, the university wants to provide program support for the business school, including hiring on-site visiting professors to help teach, and funding new equipment.
BSU sends three to NFL

Dave Stewart

Three former Boise State football players are heading for the big time. Tight end Dave Stachelski, linebacker Bryan Johnson, and guard Jeremy Mankins will all join NFL training camps later this spring.

Stachelski, the 6'3" 252-pound tight end from Maryville, WA, was drafted on Sunday, April 16 with the 141st pick in the NFL draft. The New England Patriots selected Stachelski in the fifth round, the fourth of thirteen tight ends to be selected in the draft.

Stachelski represents the first Bronco player drafted since 1994. In that year, defensive tackle Kimo von Oehofen was selected by the Cincinnati Bengals, where he has played his entire career before signing a free agent contract to play with Pittsburgh Steelers this upcoming season.

Stachelski caught 31 passes for 453 yards and six touchdowns for the Broncos last season. He was also earned All Big West honors and was chosen to play in the annual East-West Shrine Game.

Stachelski heads to New England, where tight end play has been important to their success. Until his release on Feb. 9, All-Pro Ben Coates had served as tight end, compiling impressive numbers. Coates ranks second all-time in receptions and touchdowns and third all-time in receiving yards for the Patriots. Free agent pick up Eric Bjornson expects to play much of the tight end minutes for the Patriots this season.

Johnson and Mankins were both signed to free agent contracts following the draft. Johnson, a 6'1" 228-pound inside linebacker from Pocatello, has agreed to a deal with the Washington Redskins to compete for a spot on special teams. Mankins made his deal with the Detroit Lions. A 6'5" 324-pound guard from Hughson, Calif., Johnson led Boise State in tackles for the past three seasons. This year he had 105 tackles, 4.5 sacks and 14 tackles for a loss. Both Johnson and Mankins were first team All Big West selections. The NFL spring camps will open later this month.

Coaches look at both offense and defense in final spring scrimmage

special to the arbiter

Boise State football coaches saw the best of both worlds during Saturday's annual spring scrimmage, pitting the number one's against the number two's. Boise State's offense ended up putting up 27 points on the board, but did so with 20 points in the fourth quarter. The Bronco number two's managed just nine points, as the first in line defense dominated in stretches.

"I thought both defensive groups showed progress," says head coach Dirk Koetter. "The number two's actually contained the number one offense in the first half, getting big plays from the likes of Tony Altieri, Travis Burgher and Wes Nurse."

The scrimmage was comprised of four eight minute quarters. Boise State's two offensive units combined to go six-of-seven in the first half. But, penalties hampered the number one "O", with seven total for the game. Five came on procedure penalties, while the other two were holding calls.

"We looked a little sloppy offensively," observes Koetter. "But, things started to click a little better in the second half."

Hendricks went four-of-seven for 91 yards leading the number one offense in the second half, while backup quarterbacks Ryan Dinwiddie and B.J. Rhode also took their turns running the number one offense. Rhode went four-of-seven in his stint, including throwing a 28-yard pass to Andre Banks on fourth down, and then hitting Fanucchi on an out-pattern for a 26-yard touchdown pass to end the scoring.

Hendricks terminated the day by completing 10-of-18 passes for 178 yards. He also ran in an 18-yard score late in the third quarter, accounting for the number one offense's first touchdown. Rhode and Dinwiddie combined to go six-of-10 for 84 yards in their stints leading the number one offense.

Saturday's scrimmage concluded Boise State's 15 practice spring season. The Broncos open the 2000 season on Sept. 2 against New Mexico before beginning defense of their Big West and Crucial.com Humanitarian Bowl championship on Oct. 21 against North Texas in the conference opener.

Washington family wants to transport son closer to home

Former Bronco point guard Gerry Washington remained in Boise at Arbiter press time, despite efforts to move him closer to his family's home in Southern California.

Washington was originally scheduled to be moved to the UCLA Medical Center last week, until the center experienced difficulties in accommodating the Boise State graduate. Washington has been in a coma since he collapsed during a pickup basketball game on April 6.

Doctors believe Washington's condition resulted from an enlarged heart, a normally undetectable illness likely stemming from a viral infection.

Although CPR was promptly administered, Doctors speculate Washington's brain went without oxygen for five to ten minutes. Long enough, doctors believe, to have caused him severe brain damage.

Despite the grim prognosis from Washington's medical team, the family is maintaining an upbeat, positive attitude.

"Chris (Washington's little brother) thinks Gerry's just going to get right up and walk and nobody can tell him anything different and we all feel the same way," says Washington's dad, Gerry Washington Sr. during a press conference last week. "It may be a little while down the road. We feel with God's spirit and all of the prayers we've received from throughout the nation Gerry will be healed and he'll be made whole again."

Because the incident occurred just two days before his 23rd birthday, Washington remains covered under his parents' insurance plan. Unfortunately, the specialized aircraft required to transport a patient in his condition is not paid for by insurance and will cost the family $10,000.

In an effort to assuage the financial burden placed on the Washington's, members of the Boise State Athletic Department squared off against local media representatives for a charity basketball game to help the family who have become part of the BSU family.

Head basketball coach Rod Jensen, who participated in the event, recounts what happened when a young boy entered a local bank to donate to the cause:

"The little kid said 'Do you take change?', and (the bank teller) says, 'Why do you ask?', and the little kid said 'Well that's all I have.' That's the kind of effort that Gerry gave us on the court and that's the kind of effort we're going to need to ensure the Washington's don't have to worry about financial difficulties so they can concentrate on God's work."

To donate, call Idaho Independent Bank at 343-5565 or stop in at 317 N. 9th St. in Boise.
State Board of Education addresses new role as parent of IPTV

Critics claim the move amounts to censorship.

"It underestimates Idahoans' intelligence," says American Civil Liberties Union director Jack Van Valkenburg.

But supporters assert the decision insures greater media responsibility and doesn't establish policy. "It rather asks for programming accountability," says Senator Hal Bunderson.

Now, the two sides remain embattled over a recent state mandate that the State Board of Education oversee programming decisions by Idaho Public Television. Many viewers wonder what they'll see, or not get to see, next.

It's exactly what Idaho audiences should not view that prompted state budget writers to add language to an appropriations measure for the station.

Both the house and senate then approved what was termed "intent language" that charged the State Board of Education with the task of making sure "no program shall be broadcast which promotes, supports or encourages the violation of Idaho criminal statutes." It also requires that SBOE report to the Joint-Finance Appropriations Committee during the next legislative session.

Bunderson spearheaded the effort to attach the measure. "Idaho Public Television is a wonderful public asset and needs to remain an important delivery source of education and family enrichment in a growing desert of rank commercialism. Now it is everyone's duty to make sure IPTV stays 'the best.'"

State Board of Education members met this past week to discuss how they will actually deal with the mandate, but they won't make a decision until June. Running disclaimers on Idaho Public Television declaring the station may air controversial programming was one of the suggestions.

The board discussed the issue briefly at a meeting last week, but claim they need more time to consider its complexities.

"If we don't do something we're in trouble, and if we do too much we're in trouble," comments board member Harold Davis. "We need to find some middle ground that will pacify both sides. I think it can be done, but we're going to have to tread carefully."

Lawmakers have had IPTV under a microscope after the controversial airing of "It's Elementary," a documentary on how teachers and parents talk about homosexuality with children. The decision prompted an outcry from many of state lawmaker's constituents who supported the intent language, including Bunderson's. But the consensus at public hearings held on funding measures for IPTV was positive. Many citizens expressed their support for the airing of the program. But despite the hearings, budget writers carved out their own funding plan and added the intent language with no further public testimony.

IPTV General Manager Peter Morrill says that move proved disturbing. "I find it difficult to believe that the people of this state want to erect walls to avoid seeing issues on public policy."

BSU Communications professor Pete Lutze says he fears the language could "have a chilling effect on programming. If certain shows aren't aired for whatever reason, it could make minorities less visible and allow for the ostracization of those groups. As a visual society we form constructs through what we see. If certain groups are excluded, then it impoverishes us all."

Graduation ceremony changes reflect BSU growth

editor in chief

Increased enrollment means more changes at Boise State and this year's graduation ceremony proves no exception.

In the fall semester of 1999, BSU set a record enrollment of 16,216 students, the first time ever that an Idaho university surpassed the 16,000 enrollment mark.

As typically happens in the spring semester, enrollment decreased, although only by 229 students, to 15,987.

This marks the ninth consecutive semester that Boise State posted an increase in its enrollment over the previous year.

In addition, enrollment in the last six semesters has been at a record level over enrollment one year before.

And with that many students, BSU President Charles Ruch decided it was time to institute some changes to the graduation ceremony. Ruch claims the decision stems from two reasons. "First, the size of the college ceremonies has grown such that only a few on-campus venues can accommodate the crowds. As a result, for many people commencement became an all-day event. Second, there was no appropriate time to hold the Commencement Convocation, which resulted in low attendance."

Ruch suggested earlier this year that the commencement committee begin looking at how to restructure the event as to "streamline" the event.

"We had to figure out how to have the touch of a small institution with the reality that BSU is now big," says Ruch. "We wanted to recapture the magic."

Now, instead of the traditional graduation of separate colleges, this year students will promenade through a two-line format that Ruch says will "keep the ceremony moving at a brisk pace." Two large screens will also broadcast the graduates accepting their degrees so those with far-away seats in the Pavilion will be able to see their love one up close. And for those with elderly or out-of-town relatives, the commencement committee once again plans to broadcast the event on the web, at wdl.boisestate.edu/commence.

ment. The usual lengthy speeches have also been eliminated and students will be offered a chance after the ceremony to regroup with other students and professors from their respective colleges. BSU separate ceremonies are somewhat unusual; mass graduation is the norm at most universities.

The initial intent of returning to this format used in years past was to cut more than an hour from the length of the ceremony. Organizers are aiming at keeping the event to between two to two and a half hours.

The ceremony begins at 2 p.m. on May 13 but doors will open around noon.
The event begins with an opening by President Ruch and then a speech by the ASBSU president Matt Bott. Then graduates will get their diplomas.

Before the ceremony there will be a Commencement Brunchon Buffet from 10:30 to 11:30. and everyone is encourage to call and make reservations at 208-426-1114. Tickets are on sale for $10 for adults, $5 for kids under 12.

Top ten things to do with the textbooks the Bookstore won’t buy back:

10. Leave the books in a pile on the Bookstore counter and make them haul them around.
9. Give them to your parents to store with the rest of your stuff.
8. Auction them off on e-bay to some unsuspecting freshman.
7. You and some friends combine your books, open a textbook supply company and sell them back to the Bookstore in the fall.
6. Enter the national Paper Airplane contest. The glossy pages will add an aerodynamic advantage.
5. Put them on a shelf in your new office where they will get about as much use as they did while you were in college.
4. Donate them to your fraternity/sorority to use as toilet paper to free up more money for “party supplies.”
3. Hold a book burning party—just because you can!
2. Actually READ them!
1. Pile them in a reserved parking spot and let the parking Nazi’s ticket them!

FROM THE FACULTY AND STAFF OF THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC POLICY AND ADMINISTRATION
Report shows job market and wages best in years

Erica Hill, editor in chief

Employment is at an all-time high according to the U.S. Department of Labor's most recent job growth report and officials say that's due, in part, to the increased opportunities on the Internet. Since the beginning of 1993, 20 million new jobs have been created and the unemployment rate is now the lowest it's been in 29 years, at 4.1 percent. But despite the gains in the high-tech fields, officials say those with degrees in areas not dealing with computers will also enjoy a robust job market.

"There is still demand for students who have developed critical thinking skills, which a liberal education can provide," says Jan Clouser, department analyst. "If a student in the liberal arts has clarity on what they want to do, and has previous work-related experience, they will be attractive to any employer."

Labor officials report that many of the new jobs are in professional and managerial occupations, and these two categories account for almost 70 percent of college graduates in the work force. Across all industries, employment in these categories is growing the most rapidly, and together they account for over 60 percent of all new job creation. They also account for almost 70 percent of all college graduates in the work force, so rising employment in these occupations reflects the premium that our economy now places on the acquisition of skills.

The positive market has also generated bigger wages for most workers. Real median household income reached an all-time high of $38,885 in 1998. The poverty rate fell to 12.7 percent, the lowest it has been since 1979. So 2000 graduates should expect a more favorable job market than in years past. But Clouser warns, "only if they work hard at finding the right job."

No more classes, no more books...no more teachers’ dirty looks.

1-Set a purpose and make sure its different from your goals. Having a good job and earning $70,000 a year is not a purpose. Having three kids is not a purpose. Being a good parent is. Owning a Lexus is a goal. Helping the poor is a purpose.

2-Don’t fear the working world. The worst part of it all is finding a job. But the best thing you can do is get a nice chunk of work experience under your belt in your field of endeavor. This means sticking it out in a position that per-chance doesn’t thrill you for a minimum of a year.

3-Most jobs are going to require you to interact with other people. The better you do this, the faster you’ll move up the ladder of success. This doesn’t mean ass-kissing, though flattering the boss a little never hurts. It mainly means good communication, avoiding conflicts and resolving those conflicts that do arise.

4-And of all these things, perhaps the most poignant is to remember college life and those that helped you through. Also, recall the phrase that has lifted the hearts of generations of students if you ever feel nostalgic: “No more classes, no more books...No more teachers’ dirty looks.”

Good luck grads!

School has been a way of life for most of Boise State’s graduates for the last 16 or so years. Every September, students headed off to classes and each June they stop. It’s been a way of life and now graduates are faced with the reality that they may never attend classes again.

Many of the 15,000 Boise State graduates already have determined the fateful question of “what’s next,” some still don’t know.

But whatever the decision is, each individual will face some serious life changes. To ease the transition, The Arbiter has compiled a list of suggestions to help with the move into the real world.

Congratulations to the COBE International Business graduating seniors!

"If one advances confidently in the direction of his dreams, and endeavors to live the life which he has imagined, he will meet with a success unexpected in common hours... If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put foundations under them." - Henry David Thoreau

We are proud of you!

You’re graduating, now get a job.

Where can you find that perfect job? You know the one where you can wear jeans and get paid with no figures? Here are some tips:

Job hunting:

Get a resume: If you don’t have one now, get one today. This is the first and most important step. Do not just throw one together like you did with so many term papers. Like those term papers, the end result will be reflected with the number of interviews you are offered.

Don’t pay to have some one “find” a job for you. Normally it is the company that will pay some one to find you. Plus there are many services that let jobs for free.

Be flexible: If you can, be willing to travel or move out of the area. Even though you may have friends or family here, the northwest is growing and some companies may offer you a job in Seattle, Portland or Salt Lake City.

Good places to start looking:

BSU Career Center: This is a great place to go. They can help you out with everything you need to find a job. Also, they help you write a resume, do mock interviews, and find internships.

President, Boise State University

Congratulations, graduates, on reaching this important milestone in your lives.

The Commencement celebration May 13 marks an end and a beginning. It recognizes accomplishments achieved and goals realized. But it also symbolizes your entrance into yet another phase of life. This is especially true, in a symbolic way, for the Class of 2000, the first class to graduate in the new millennium. As such, you are a metaphor for new beginnings, for the bright future that awaits all of us on the other side of the magic moment we celebrated at midnight on January 1.

Yours is a generation that will be at the forefront of enormous change. Just as your experience at Boise State has changed you, it also has prepared you for change. I hope you have learned your lessons well, for the pace of change promises to accelerate exponentially during your lifetimes. Just 10 years ago, for example, the Internet was unheard of outside of a handful of academicians. Now, fast forward ahead 10-20 years and imagine where that and other technologies will take you. Even in our wildest dreams, we can’t imagine what surprises are ahead of us.

You have worked hard to earn your place among Boise State’s family of alumni. Along the way, you and your families have sacrificed, sometimes in immeasurable ways. But the education you have obtained, as symbolized by the diploma you will receive, cannot be measured. Nor can it be taken away. Enjoy your moment in the sun on May 13, for you are marking a special day of transition into a bright future.

Boise city spokesperson Suzanne Burton says that the notion of suitable programming for TVTV always centered the core of the discussion, but claims the city doesn’t plan to dictate what’s shown.

“We’ve developed the structure of the board so members will have the ability to make programming decisions independent of political pressure,” says Burton.

IPTV, however, is feeling the heat from lawmakers, as well as the State Board of Education, which must now decide how to handle the imposed mandate. Board member Curtis Eaton of Twin Falls has suggested running a disclaimer on IPTV at least four times a day, declaring that the station may show illegal acts but doesn’t promote them. He also proposed including a statement on all IPTV programming, warning people that the content may prove controversial and they can get more information from the station.

“This is a good-faith effort to try to respond to a fairly complicated issue,” Eaton remarked.

Whichever way the board decides to comply with the mandate, one outcome seems certain: the issue carries serious ramifications for IPTV. If lawmakers aren’t satisfied with the guidelines, state funding for the station could be jeopardized. But if they enact a policy that violates federal public television regulations, IPTV may lose its federal funding.

The move that has put board members in this quandary “induces self-censorship,” protests ACLU’s Van Valkenburg. He claims the language forces micro-management of IPTV and seeks “to override the editorial standards of IPTV and PBS.”

Van Valkenburg represents one of many Idaho lawyers who claim the language conflicts with federal law. Debra Kristensen and Roy Eiguren have also weighed in on that possibility. They fired off a letter to senators last month, stating that the legislative intent language “goes beyond the Legislature’s proper authority by creating an unconstitutional system of prior restraint. Both the Idaho and United States Constitutions are clear: the government cannot make laws that abridge the freedom of speech and the press,” Kristensen and Eiguren write.

“If we don’t do something we’re in trouble, and if we do too much we’re in trouble. We need to find some middle ground that will pacify both sides. I think it can be done, but we’re going to have to tread carefully.”

America’s Public Television Stations legal affairs vice president Marilyn Mohrmann-Gillis claims the language “contradicts the Communications Act which requires public broadcasters to ‘encourage the development of programming that involves creative risks and that addresses the needs of unserved audiences, particularly children and minorities.’ On a state level, there are mechanisms in place that assure that political influence, including funding decisions, do not influence the programming decisions of the licensee,” says Gillis.

The Idaho Attorney General’s office has not been asked to review the language but the question of the measure’s legality may be posed later this year.

In the meantime, Professor Pete Lutze warns that “it’s important that public television not be a tyranny of majority viewpoints.” And in an election year, Idaho’s audiences may be left wondering if their state legislature is actually censoring access to diverse political as well as social points of view.
Student showcase promises laughs

Autumn Haynes

A new generation of theatre directors will present four evenings of student directed performance. The Boise State University Theatre Majors Association sponsors the Spring Showcase at 7:30 p.m., April 26-29 on the Morrison Center Stage II. "Testimonies from A Black Box," the fortuitous title of this semester's collection, contains eleven one-act plays directed by theatre majors enrolled in Directing 402. The program on April 26 and 28 includes The Whole Shebang, by Richard Orloff, Christopher Durang's. (An Actor's Nightmarse, Spring Time, by Maria Irene Fornes, W'ASp, by Steve Martin and: A Reluctant Tragic Hero, by Anton Chekhov.

Lisa Collins, directing An Actor's Nightmare says she selected the one-act because, "Durang is an established playwright and I knew there would be material to work with. It is a story [theatre majors] can all relate with," referring to the fact that An Actor's Nightmare indeed presents a nightmare of sorts for a young man who discovers he is in a play. Like most of Durang's plays, the hilarious comedy takes a few sharp stabs at Catholicism.

An Actor's Nightmare is just one of the plays presented that incorporates religion in its theme: The Whole Shebang, directed by Steve Plante, places the human race on exhibit for God's professors to examine.

"I love lesbians," were the first words out of director Cody Hyslop's mouth when referring to why he chose to direct Spring Time. Hyslop continues, "It was the only piece I've read that has moved me."

Professor of the directing students, Gordon Reinhart, encourages his young directors to select material they enjoy and the students take that advice to heart. Devin Kearns and Kam Hervey have teamed up to direct W'ASp, a play by actor/comedian, Steve Martin. Kearns says she and Hervey select the script because they both love the humor and thought it would be enjoyable to co-direct.

Justin Ness, directing A Reluctant Tragic Hero, did quite a bit of research before selecting the Chekhov piece. "I've always wanted to direct [Chekhov] and I thought it would be fun."

Courtney Bohl shares that enthusiasm for the section she directs from the Broadway musical, Assassins, by Stephen Sondheim and John Wiedman. Bohl says she selected the script because, "It is a show that I have really loved for a long time and the way it is written is very strong. I just like the dark comedy." Comedy doesn't get much darker: Assassins explores the history of presidential assassination in America.

Assassins along with Four AM, by David Mamet, Durang's The Hardy Boys and the Mystery of Where Babies Come From, directed by Greg Chally. This selection takes two dim-witted young detectives and a school nurse and ties it all up into one big uproar that audiences won't soon forget.

Sorry, Wrong Number, directed by Stephen Harmon, stops the comedy dead in its tracks with the well-known story of Mrs. Stevenson who overhears plans for a murder but can't get anyone to believe her until it's too late.

Two more comedies round out the spring 2000 Showcase. The first, Downtown, directed by Jeffrey Hatcher, displays an upown attitude piece, down to the Rolex watch and cappuccino (hold the foam). Downtown visits a posh restaurant where a group of writers pass the time criticizing others.

The Problem, directed by Tennille Childester, presents a curious riddle involving an illegitimate child, black theatrical make-up, adultery and crazy sex games.

Every semester theatre students look forward to Showcase because it provides opportunities for designers, sound technicians and non-theatre majors to share the spotlight. Showcase also offers students the occasion to explore their talents and skills. Student actor Aaron Keifer says he enjoys working with student directors. "I feel more free to try different techniques." Fellow actor Jason Haskins agrees with Keifer's sentiments. "It is a thrilling experience to work with my fellow students."

Paul McGee has participated in a total of five showcase productions, but plans on taking a different route in the future. "I'm [taking] Directing next year and I'm really looking forward to it."

Scott Huntsman, who has been involved in four previous showcases says, "I am interested in directing, but I have more aspirations to write." Last fall, the Showcase featured one of Huntsman plays, Snack Time, and he hopes to have another ready for next year.

Tickets cost $3 for students and $4 for general admission. They can be purchased at the door. Some pieces contain mature language and content. For more information, please call 426-3980.

Theater arts students prep for the big show.
Bardenay: making their liquor and serving it too

Jessica Holmes  a&e writer

The old brick building of Bardenay, outdoor windows hung with green awnings, lies on 610 Grove Street in downtown Boise. The space inside reminds one of a renovated barn or warehouse. Painted cement serves as the floor, multi-paned windows reach high in gauzy rectangles and wood rafters support the high ceiling. A bar lines one wall, complete with the shine of glass liquor bottles and metal-framed mirrors. Square tables monopolize the rest of available floor space. Patrons sit close. Clashing voices meld into one loud, sprawling conversation.

The philosophy of Bardenay seems to echo that old saying: eat, drink and be merry. Don't expect intimacy. Don't expect a quiet space. Expect good food, good drink and loud communication.

The mix of restaurant and bar strikes an original note, but Bardenay's originality stems far deeper. Out of the nation, Bardenay stands out as the only restaurant to also harbor a distillery within its walls. In a corner, a shiny bronze and gold still sits surrounded by glass panes. The still produced the restaurant's first hard liquor in a ribbon-cutting ceremony on April 25.

“Our first product will be rum,” remarks co-owner Kevin Settles, who recently sold a hard cider company he owned since 1987. Vodka and gin with the Bardenay label will soon be brought to its already extensive liquor menu.

Settles oversees the making of alcohol while fellow owner, Dave Krick, who also owns Bitter Creek, runs the restaurant. “I had been interested in distilling for a long time,” notes Settles. “Dave called and we began chatting about it and he said, ‘You know, I'd like to do a business with you.’ It was a great opportunity to start something up.”

It took an arduous three years before Krick and Settles could convince both state and federal governments to license the business. In the late 1800s, Congress passed a law making it difficult to make and retail hard alcohol in one space. This law allowed the government to easily regulate and tax the sale of liquor.

To get through the thin bars of the law, Krick and Settles bent the definitions of some of the wording. They claimed the glass barrier dividing the still from the restaurant was enough to separate the two. Fortunately the state agreed with their argument and the federal government soon followed.

The strong arm of the law remains somewhat oppressive. The two owners must run a gauntlet simply to pass alcohol from still to bar. After the government authorizes the alcohol recipe and the liquor is made, it must be bottled, packaged and ready to sell to the State of Idaho. Full cases are brought to a liquor dispensary, which applies a tax stamp and enters the sale into their records. Finally, after all this, Bardenay can buy the alcohol and bring it back to the place of its birth.

“It’s a convoluted way to get a hold of it,” Settles concedes. “But for the privilege of being able to have the distillery, it’s worth it.”
Foreign films focus of SPB May series

Autumn Haynes

Dreams, a film by Japanese director Akira Kurosawa, opens with a blue sky and green grass that burn the retina with their brilliant color. Kurosawa peers under a person's sleeping eyelids and pulls out eight flashes of dreams. As in sleep, some flashes tell a whole story, some are simply fragments, some seem surreal. All, however, suck the viewer outside of the suburbs in the U.S. and take the mind, not to the crowded island of Japan, but to a bright world that lives only on the celluloid of Kurosawa.

Yes, one must force the eye down to subtitles at the bottom of the screen. Soon, however, one forgets they are reading and the film no longer seems foreign. It simply entangles.

Dreams comes to the SPEC on May 9, and the Iranian film A Moment of Innocence shows on May 2. Foreign films serve as the focus for the Student Programs Board May Film series. A Moment of Innocence spotlights a rough time in great Iranian director Moshen Makhmalbaf's life. At 17, Makhmalbaf, a hot-blooded anti-Shah protester, stabbed a policeman who shot him in return. The policeman came to an audition for one of his films twenty years later. The incident spurred Makhmalbaf to make the film.

The director strove to be objective in A Moment of Innocence. The moment belonged not to him alone, but to the policeman, who was allowed some control in the casting and directing of his own memories. Even time remains objective. Minutes crawl by as people perform mundane tasks like walking. A layer of crushing irony reveals itself when the audience realizes that the reason the policeman hangs around his post all day stems from his crush on a young girl who walks by frequently. The girl ends up as Makhmalbaf's cousin and she's in on the stabbing plot. "When the young actor playing the policeman begins to fall in love with the actress chosen for the role of the cousin, history appears doomed to repeat itself," writes Seattle film critic Bruce Reid. "But grace is always possible, provided you never forget the humanity around you. The movie's final freeze frame is one of the most beautiful images in all of cinema: redemptive, tender; and yes, chasteningly innocent."

Ticket for the films cost $2 general admission and $1 for students. They play at 7 p.m.

A drunk priest walks into a bar and tells the Irish bartender about his best friend, a rabbi, and a beautiful girl they both love. Sounds like the beginning of a joke? Close. It's the opening of Keeping the Faith, a new romantic comedy about the love triangle around a priest (Edward Norton), a rabbi (Ben Stiller) and a successful business woman (Jenna Elfman).

The plot of Keeping the Faith couldn't be more straightforward. Three kids have grown up together on the streets of New York City. Then, their lives take distinctly different paths. Father Brian Finn and Rabbi Jake Schram, still close friends, have become popular figures in their religious communities.

As becomes obvious, their basketball skills have one quality in common with their love lives: they can't score. However, the return of childhood friend Anna breathes fresh air into their relationships. Jake and Brian, stunned by her beauty, can't believe she's still single. Well, almost. As a successful business woman she admits to having a relationship with her phone.

It doesn't take long until Jake successfully manages to replace the instrument, against the conventions of his Jewish faith that don't approve of affairs with non-Jews.

Father Brian has his own well-suppressed desires, which seem to turn into reality one night when a tearful and confused Anna asks him to come over immediately. But the good-hearted priest is for a surprise.

The plot remains mostly predictable but, fortunately, funny at the same time. The religious background serves as a pool for a number of jokes that are mostly original. This film doesn't make fun of religion like last year's Dogma. Rather, it amuses through religion, and the small complications that the friends' convictions bring along.

One possible objection against the movie: it sacrifices the ideals of both religions for the sake of laughs. The Catholic priest gets drunk and falls in love without a shadow of guilt. And Jake, the rabbi, indulges in his affair, hiding it from his congregation — and when they eventually find out, he apologizes not for his fault, but for not sharing his fault with them.

Also, true to Hollywood, the film seems to turn the religious services into something like an entertainment show.

Nevertheless, Keeping the Faith eventually convinces as a comedy for one reason: it doesn't pretend to be more than just a comedy. Certainly some more serious aspects of friendship and loyalty are treated along the way, but the slapstick dominates. For example, the bartender tells the drunk Brian, "I don't do penance. I do shots." Also, the filmmakers found an excellent cast for their roles.

Edward Norton not only convinces as the priest, but also directed and co-produced the film. Not a bad start for this promising young talent who was nominated for an Academy Award last year. Norton, Stiller and Elfman successfully manage to appear as normal people, not movie stars, on the screen. Jenna Elfman looks beautiful, but not like a cut-out model. Apart from these young actors, Norton found veteran help for some of the smaller roles: Milos Forman, director of One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest and last year's Man on the Moon, appears as an elderly priest. And Anne Bancroft, the unforgettable Mrs. Robinson from The Graduate, plays Jake's helpful mother.

Maybe Edward Norton, as a young filmmaker, didn't yet dare to escape some of the stereotypes Hollywood provides for comedies and love triangles. But he certainly provided a different kind of escape: he allows the audience to escape for an evening of good entertainment.
Deferring taxes with TIAA-CREF can be so rewarding, you'll wonder why you didn't do it sooner.

One of the fastest ways to build a retirement nest egg is through tax-deferred Supplemental Retirement Annuities (SRAs) from TIAA-CREF.

With funds automatically deducted from your paycheck, you can easily build income to supplement your pension and Social Security.

And your contributions to SRAs grow undiminished by taxes until you withdraw the funds. Add to that TIAA-CREF's solid investment performance, bolstered by our commitment to keeping expenses low, and you have more money working for you.

So why wait? Let us help you build a comfortable retirement today with tax-deferred SRAs. We think you will find it rewarding in the years to come.

The Cuban pissfest crisis

Damon Hunzeker

Opinion

While leafing through a magazine in a grocery store today, I peripherally noticed someone approaching on a skateboard. A hand darted in front of my eyes and grabbed a copy of Spin. Suddenly, without offering a simple "Excuse me," the magazine was clumsily thrown back and landed on my feet. I turned around to see what kind of person would display such a lack of civility. I don't know if it was a boy or a girl, but whatever it was, its hair was simultaneously long and shaved off. Among other self-imposed anatomical mutilations, its ear was pierced with a chain that connected to its lip. It stared down the cereal aisle and left behind an unfriendly stench. It wore a black t-shirt with 'TEENAGE PISSFEST' scrawled across the back.

I don't expect to see the creature again, and I never exchanged a word with it. However, I hate him, or her, or whatever it is. I hope it crawls into a dumpster and dies.

Actually, disregard that. I have a more useful proposal. If George W. Bush wants to win the presidential race he should enlist a troop of gas-masked interlopers to find the smelly creature and capture it. Then he should deliver the following speech:

"My fellow Americans, if you'll look to my left, you'll see a cage. Inside that cage resides the embodiment of everything wrong with America. I'll remove the blanket so you can witness the depravity yourself. I expected the horrified gasps, but please don't cover your eyes. It is important, if we expect to return this nation to its roots of self-discipline and decency, for you to gaze upon this mind-numbing spectacle.

"After careful research, we have determined that the caged creature before you is a male. We call him Piss Boy. My campaign workers have taken the liberty of piercing Piss Boy's mouth shut for two reasons: 1) It was already half-way complete, so we didn't think he'd mind. And 2) Without the procedure, you wouldn't be able to hear me, because he incessantly screams. Where's my bleeding skateboard, you assholes?" Take a moment to fully absorb the worthless pile of flesh that is Piss Boy. Kind of makes you want to barf, doesn't it?

"Well, now I'd like to cleanse your palate with someone who represents everything honorable about America. Come out. As you can see, we took advantage of the Cuban Refugee Rental Program. Ladies and gentlemen, I present to you—Elian Gonzalez! We have to get Elian back home by 5:00 so I'll make this quick. The Clinton Administration, to which my opponent Al Gore belongs, took the position of sending Elian back to Fidel Castro's despotic regime. If Elian grows up in Cuba, he will more than likely be placed in a communist-propaganda camp, whereupon he'll learn to serve the government and accept oppression. His job will be chosen for him. He will not enjoy the freedom to rise and fall on his own merits. Instead, his Cuban tyrants will keep him in the same position as everyone else—dirt poor and waiting in line for six days to get a loaf of stale bread. If he resists the mandated homogeny of Castro's pathetic commune, he'll be shot or tortured.

"Now let's examine Elian's story. His mother wanted him to breathe free air. She wanted him to live where he chooses, to make his own decisions unencumbered by the whims of a greedy dictator, to become great—rather than toil amid the common rabble of Cuba. So Elian's mother escaped with him on a raft. During the shark-infested journey, she died. But Elian survived by clinging to an inner tube until he was rescued by American fishermen. His family in the United States loves him and loves their nation. His Cuban father is a pawn of Castro who didn't even possess the courage to claim political asylum as soon as he set foot on free soil. Just look at him. Obviously, he doesn't care about his son. Like Castro, he just wants a weak body to control and abuse.

"So, if the Clinton Administration doesn't believe we have enough room for little Elian, and Castro insists upon indoctrinating communist folly into yet another willing skull, let's give everyone what they want. Fidel Castro, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, Janet Reno—we give you Piss Boy! Elian stays; Piss Boy goes. Who, I ask you, deserves to live in the nation that rebelled against the tyranny of King George? The answer is Elian—sweet, dear incarnation of freedom, Elian! And who, my American brethren, deserves to grow up under the spiritually and intellectually suffocating prison of a Cuban galap? The answer, of course, is squares in front of you—Piss Boy, my friends. It would be the most cosmically defensible trade in history. And under a George W. Bush presidency, it will happen.

"Incidentally, notice how well-behaved and mannerly Elian is, all of his own liberty-loving volition. Unlike the caged, pierced vermin to my left, it wasn't necessary to muzzle Elian. His lips are bereft of staples. Let's keep the rest of him bereft of shackles.

"To the rest of the world, I say bring us your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free. And if you act now, we'll send your favorite homeland a nauseating member of our Teenage Pissfet. Thank you, and God bless America."

Anyway, let's hope someone from the Bush campaign reads this. It's our only chance.
Dear Lesleigh,

I'm the first to admit I derive way too much pleasure from popular women's magazines. Maybe it's the feel of the pages slipping between my fingers, or maybe it stems back to my childhood, when the only pages our parents allowed my sisters and I to peruse sported alternating black and red ink. Heck, maybe it's even the allure of the bright, shiny colors and pungent perfume samples. Whatever the draw, I have more guaranteed fan than an Idaho Republican on Election Day whenever I paw through women magazine's glossy spreads.

A coworker of mine recently brought me the latest issue of Glamour, its silky-smooth cover ablaze with a foot-high picture of hot-pink-bikini-clad Elizabeth Hurley. "You'll love this," she told me with what I suspect represented a tinge of sarcasm. Indeed, inside she and I feasted our eyes upon page after page of curve-repressed, breast-enhanced, collagen-lipped, bikini-area-waxed vixens, buck-naked save for their thin, strategically placed scraps of yarn and nylon.

We spent a good fifteen minutes discussing issues ranging from body-image to the Riot Grrrl band Bikini Kill before she abandoned my desk for the joys of number crunching. Once she turned the corner to her office, I flipped immediately to the page in the magazine that promised to teach me what to do and what not to do to my man right. After all, who better to advise a woman how to please her man than a frustrated, underpaid, glamour magazine columnist, right?

Reading through this yarn-worthy, eye-rolling article, it occurred to me that its author should have spent less time trying to max out capitulations for sexually graphic terms and more time counting the ideals of empowerment. As usual, such thoughts inspired me to grab my keyboard and try my hand — as another frustrated, underpaid columnist — at addressing the questions Glamour spent three pages never answering. I like to think of my venture as an act of community service, a selfless expression of my philanthropic nature. Yes, just ask Lesleigh how she'd tackle the issues in Glamour's column: "What Pushes His Sexual Panic Buttons?"

Q. Dear Lesleigh,

The article says I should avoid the "no-feedback freeze" in which I don't provide my sexual partner with enough verbal encouragement. Do you agree?

A. That's a tricky one. On the one hand, who wants the pressure of having to out-vocalize those impossible standards — both vocally and physically — when trapped within the X's of a live performance? On the other hand, blank stares and comments such as: "Oh I'm sorry. Did you say something?" into the erotic setting probably won't provide your partner with superior sexual validation.

I say forget the article's advice to align every response with your partner's expectations. Do and say whatever the hell makes you feel good; chances are slim that you'll forget him (I'd say "or her," but the article seems pretty aggressively heterosexual oriented, doesn't it?) presence in the room.

Q. Dear Lesleigh,

Regarding discussing my sexes, the article advises me: "Instead of confusing your guys like they're your best friend, talk to them like they're your parents." What do you think?

A. Yikes! That's a little too much Freud for me to handle! I'm baffled by the author's insistence on insulting men by making their ego "Fragile". Handle with Caution! The author seems to forget that many females are socialized into regarding verbal interplay as an essential avenue for connecting and bonding; instead, she legitimizes the traditionally masculine mode of communication by urging women to just shut up and do it.

Your stories should take up much space as you need in order to feel comfy with your bed bud. If his ego proves too inelastic to encompass the bread crumbs of information you toss out, then maybe he needs to spend less time in your bed and more time on a leather couch.

The exception to this rule? In light of the article's advice, try to keep thoughts of mommy and daddy out of the bedroom. That's just creepy.

Q. Dear Lesleigh,

The article says I should embrace his desire to head south, regardless of my reservations. What, in your divine wisdom, would you advise me to do?

A. My personal philosophy includes embracing with zest any extracurricular activities either of you take the time and care to introduce. Not everyone, however, feels comfy with the range of possibilities that approach opens up. When the article advises women not to "discourage him from visiting below the belt," it sweeps under the carpet all those years of conditioning that teaches women to sublimate their own needs in favor of satisfying their partners. Assuming you have an interest in embracing this new sexual dimension, both of you should approach the issue not only with a whole warehouse of patience but also a healthy understanding of this gendered genealogy.

Q. Dear Lesleigh,

Why does the article bother mentioning the gaucherie of spending twenty pre-sex minutes in the bathroom?

A. I wish to hell I knew. I mean honestly, is this some kind of unspoken social ill of which many of us remain blissfully unaware? Seriously, I guess I would have to disagree once again with the article's author. I tend to think a person likely wouldn't spend an overabundance of time in the house's least entertaining room unless absolute necessary.

More importantly, we should ask ourselves why a woman should spend that much time socializing with the plumbing. Does this time out involve issues of birth control? If so, and if carefully ensuring safe sex makes some men nervous, perhaps they and the article's author might best ally their concerns by researching and marketing less time-consuming modes of male birth control. Whew! Problem solved!

Q. Dear Lesleigh,

Help! What does the article mean when it tells me to avoid "a Linda Blair voice during sex"?

A. This little slice of spicy advice is what we professionals like to call "hypocrisy." Earlier on, the article's author urges women not to clam up during romantic romps and now she flip-flops and forbids any chatter rating higher than NC-17. What does she expect us to discuss instead? Maya Angelou's poetry, the DC riots, our family recipes for zucchini bread?

Once we clear away the smoke, we find the article's core theme burning inside. Women, the article says all but states, should operate within a tiny sphere of acceptable behavior, ensuring that their partners always remain comfy and validated, coddled and cuddled. Well, sugar, wake up and smell the Motion Lotion. Your sexual experiences should always thrive within a comfortable and familiar social space. If you're a chatty person, feel free to compare his lovemaking to the inner workings of an auto engine. If you find yourself cozier in the stoic role, the occasional smile, nod or A-OK sign will have to suffice. Regardless, keep in mind that sex involves not just one, but two partners. Even more shocking, you represent one of those partners, and your satisfaction remains just as valid as his!
Jesus was an activist

As I gear up to protest the destruction of God's beautiful creation, I am skeptical of the number of concerned citizens who will show up. In Boise, it is always difficult to get people to take to the streets to speak out against injustice, unless somebody is trying to remove the cross from Table Rock. I ask myself, why do they rally behind the symbol of Christ yet refuse to live by his example?

Jesus was a long-haired, sandal-wearing guy who believed in peace and justice. He had a respect for all people, and life. He was always hanging out with the sick and homeless. He even had friends who were thieves and prostitutes. He didn't ever snub anyone to my knowledge; he was a real stand-up guy.

When Jesus entered the temple and saw how the bankers had gained control over the lives of the common people, he became outraged. Word has it that he overturned the tables in a fit of rage and denounced the bankers as traitors to their own people. He didn't harm any person, but he did disrupt the day's business, and destroyed the property of the exploiters.

Word started to get around to the authorities that a trouble-maker, and twelve of his buddies, was speaking out against the injustices of the system. So the boys in blue paid Jesus a little visit.

They hauled him in and booked him. When Jesus was told to bow and kiss the feet of the elitist oppressor of his people, he refused. He chose to break the law and insist that no man of authority, even the emperor of Rome, could demand his allegiance to the empire. He followed the word of his creator and defied the rule of law when it violated God's law. So Jesus was ready to go along with the program of the emperor. The politicians and bankers of the World Trade Organization, International Monetary Fund and World Bank sent their soldiers to quiet the ones speaking out for the poor, and the ones who insist upon ending the assault against beautiful life.

In Washington, D.C. this past week the police arrested about 1,300 people because they wanted to speak out against the corrupt bankers of the IMF and World Bank. They have once again succeeded in trampling on the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution by denying free speech and peaceful assembly. The government has clearly illustrated that it lives in fear of those people who insist upon living their lives in accordance to a higher law that speaks of compassion and justice for all the earth's people.

So I prepare to picket the corporate office of Boise Cascade in hopes of rallying other people to the cause of stopping the destruction of one of humanity's most precious life forces, the Chilean Rain forests. If only the Table Rock cross

Mark Holladay
Teenage pop star

In the Bible there is a section relaying the following bit of advice which has always caused me to ponder my existence. When I condense the passage it goes something like, "When I was a child I did stuff as a child, but when I grew up I put all my toys away." If this is true, I wonder if anyone in America has ever truly reached adulthood. Expanding this concept to myself, I really want to know—why do I still watch TV?

Libra: (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Warning: the sex quiz in Cancer will only cause your future relationships to crumble.

Scorpio: (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) This week everyone you see using a cell phone ask them if it's anyone you know. If they say yes, tell them to say, 'Hi.'

Sagittarius: (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) When you get your past out it will shatter your karmic floor. A better future will be found under the stairs when you clean up the mess.

Capricorn: (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The stars want you to know that the little girl in the Pepsi commercials is the anti-Chris.

Aquarius: (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Your aura has been broadcasting your thoughts lately. Get involved with the people who tune you in.

Pisces: (Feb. 19-Mar. 20) Anarchists will never rule the world unless you organize them. Oh yeah, give them a new name too.

Aries: (Mar. 21-Apr. 19) The stars have a riddle for you—If you are only vegetarians would you be considered a non-orthodox vegetarian or a carnivore with special dietary needs?

Taurus: (Apr. 20-May 20) The stars want you to get some business cards with bastard, fictitious vocations printed this week. Hand them out during political rallies, wink, and say, "I'm voting for my personal savior—how about you?"

Gemin: (May 21-June 21) Sunshine and roses for you this week. Skin cream and allergy medication next.

Cancer: (June 22-July 22) Children love hamsters and balloons for gifts, but don't combine them! You could traumatize the kid for life.

Leo: (July 23-Aug. 22) Half of being a hopeless romantic is the hopeless part. The stars want you to remember—chicka dig assholes.

Virgo: (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) One another illegitimate kid on the side. The stars suggest you take mother advice from "Mad
