ASBSU funds Campus Crusade for Christ

Decision may violate state constitution
By Andy BensQn

The Finance Advisory Board, Boise State's fiscal oversight committee, voted last week to fund the Christian-based Campus Crusade for Christ. Boise State has funded religious organizations before, including non-Christian groups, but funding a religious organization has put the university in violation of the Idaho State Constitution.

At the February 14 meeting, the board members voted 4-3 to fund the group. In the past, the group has been denied funding by the board. On this occasion, the board members voted 4-3 to fund the group.

Women's History Month feature event outlines underground abortion service
By Matt Nazaraski

On the streets of Chicago, a mobile service center has begun offering safe but illegal abortions and health education services. The service, called "Jane," is a feminist response to the political and ideological climate in the United States.

"Women's rights are human rights," said Jane's executive director, Dr. Melissa Wintrow. "We believe that every woman has the right to choose whether or not to become a parent."

The group was started by a young woman who decided to take her life in her own hands after being denied access to abortion services.

"We need to raise awareness about the availability of safe and legal abortion services," said Jane's founder, Dr. Melissa Wintrow. "It's important to remember that abortion is a human right, and we must do everything we can to protect it."

Donated modular building moved, awaits remodel

Suicide Prevention Hotline and Auxiliary Services get new home
By Eric Wills

The Boise State University administration plans to expand the University's suicide prevention and auxiliary services by relocating a modular building that will be used for administrative offices.

The approximately 1,000-square-foot, prefabricated building, which currently houses the Boise State Guardian's Center and the Boise State Women's Center, will be moved to a new location on the campus.

The renovation will include new offices, a conference room, and additional space for the Boise State Guardian's Center.

"We are excited about this move because it will provide much-needed space for our suicide prevention and auxiliary services," said Boise State President Kirtz. "This building will be a valuable resource for our students and community members."

Black history month ends, problems continue

Today is officially the end of Black History Month. I look forward to Black History Month each year, because it is an opportunity to learn about and celebrate the contributions of African Americans. However, I have come to realize that Black History Month is not enough to make up for the centuries of historical erasure and violence that African Americans have faced. The achievements and experiences of African Americans have been largely overlooked and underrepresented in history textbooks and media.

The activities during Black History Month are a good start, but we need to do more. We need to address the systemic racism and inequalities that continue to exist today. This includes recognizing the importance of affirmative action, reparations, and diversity in hiring and promotion.

I am grateful for the opportunities to learn about African American history this month, but I believe that we need to do more to ensure that all voices are heard and that all histories are represented. We need to continue to work towards a future where Black History Month is no longer necessary, and where the contributions of African Americans are recognized and celebrated every day.

'Poison' to be publicly delivered

By Mark Hilt

'Poison,' a two-substance that causes injury or death, will be publicly delivered on Stage II of the Morrison Center through live theater, according to Lisa Hyslop—the director of "Poison"—is an unparalleled experience. Consider it. Live theater, the characters are there in the same room with you, living the most terrible or challenging or hilarious moments of their lives. Unlike a cinematic experience, there is no comfortable separation between the action and the audience. Instead of patterns of projected light and sound, there are people standing in front of you. It's like lifting the walls and ceiling from someone's apartment and pulling up a chair without them knowing. Only they are not just brushing their teeth and watching television—they are creating all forms of interpersonal violence, and there is nothing you can do about it.

In the case of "Poison," we're lifting the roof off a bar. A man has returned to his old hangout. Both friends and possible enemies traffic here. This is the place where trouble comes. "Poison" is about the resolution of desperation," Hyslop said. "I was drawn into this play at first by how much each of these characters relies on, desperately needs, and painfully rejects the others. The intricate of the relationships is what most draws me in."

Jason Haskins, a BSU graduate, wrote the play. "When I realized that Stage II was going to be dark (without a show) for the first part of the semester, I desperately wanted to put up a show. When I first looked for material, I asked Jason if he might offer some of his unfinished stuff. He offered 20 pages of "Poison" and stopped looking."

Every drop of "Poison" is locally produced. Writer, director, cast and crew are all BSU graduates or students. Hyslop is especially proud of the set design. "This production is a chance for these young designers to really stretch, and they have done incredible work."

If you go...

Get a hankering for live happenings? Go. check "Poison" out. It runs Feb. 27 through March 3 and starts at 7:30 p.m. on Stage II in the Morrison Center. The final performance will be on March 3 at 2 p.m. $5 at the door.
