New bill proposes election sign approval

Proposal could be used to restrict free speech

By Casey Wyatt

A bill that could provide a way to censor campaign materials was introduced recently to the ASBUS Senate, but the sponsors of the bill adjut that a change in the bill will be necessary.

If passed in current form, Bill 33 will require election chair or chief of staff of campaign or political party to submit campaign materials before they are printed on campus.

"The bill is designed to make sure that the campus has the right to approve campaign signs," said Bob Siebolt, assistant professor of government and political science. "If a campaign sign is approved, then it will be put up on campus."

Siebolt said the bill will be used to prevent the promotion of political groups that the campus believes are not good for the school.

The bill also has the power to censor campaign signs and other election material to prevent them from being posted in classrooms and other uncensored places. Policy makers could also decide to disqualify the candidate or remove the campaign sign from the campus.

"For the bill to have any chance of working, it will have to be approved," Siebolt said. "But if it is approved, then it could be a huge step forward for the campus."

The bill was introduced to the ASBUS Senate on Tuesday, and the sponsors are working to get it passed. The sponsors include Jessica Adams, a student in the School of Social Science, and Jerilyn Grow, a senior in the School of Business.

"We want to make sure that the campus has the right to approve campaign signs," Adams said. "And we want to make sure that the students have a say in what is posted on campus."

The bill is one of many that are being introduced to the ASBUS Senate this semester. The sponsors are working to get it passed, and they hope to have it on the ballot by the end of the semester.

Tech fraud over $77K, committee reports

Technology lost more than $77,000 from fraudulent credit card transactions and forged checks over the last two years, according to a report recently released to the Student Public Account Committee of 200, an organization of top business school students and officials.

The report estimates that $74,000 of the loss to abuse of credit cards, and $3,000 was recovered from insurance.

According to the report, a group of five business students and three business staff members were the target of 49 suspect transactions from April 1, 2000, to March 31, 2001.

The report was issued by the Student Public Account Committee, which is charged with overseeing the accounts and ethics of the Student Public Account.

The committee chair, Danalyn Adams, said that the report was a "very important first step in determining how to better protect the university's financial interests." She noted that the university had already taken steps to improve security, such as installing new locks and cameras.

The committee was asked to vote on the report at its meeting on Tuesday.

Health center offers U. of U. STD test

The Student Health Care Center did not begin offering the new test for chlamydia until after the city's Clean Indoor Air ordinance was repealed as a common-sense approach to protect the health of its non-smoking populace. Those seeking its benefits still prefer to seek out a smart, savvy, and easy and effective smoking cessation service. Men still have the option of which test they would like to have done.

Scrubs, Con.

Gov. Mike Huckabee has signed a bill into law that would ban smoking in all bars and restaurants in the state.

The law, which goes into effect on Jan. 1, 2003, makes Arkansas the 12th state in the country to enact a total smoking ban in public places.

The new law, which is a significant departure from the governor's stance on the issue last year, comes after a year-long battle between business owners and health advocates.

The law was originally proposed by the state's Public Health Council, which is made up of representatives from various health organizations.

The council made the decision to support the ban after a study found that smoking in public places caused a variety of health problems, including respiratory issues and cancer.

The law was opposed by some business owners, who argued that it would hurt their bottom line and make it difficult to compete with other states.

In a cold, rainy night in November, Mike Russell faced a decision. Last year, he had a child and this year, he had to make a choice. Russel and his family decided to go to a Carleton College football game. But some of college football's best entertainment can be seen at Carleton games in the form of the Gender Student Cheerleading Squad and the Honking Knights, pep band awes football fans.

Russell, who will retire after the end of the season, is currently serving as director of the Carleton College of Engineering. He also has a role in TRW Systems and the NASA/Marshall Space Flight Center. Russell also had a role in Boise State and the University of Alabama. Honk up the crowd with your saxophones, French horns, trombones, and clarinets

At Carleton, Cheerboys pep band awe football fans. Their number fluctuates on that latter. Especially if you like cheers. And the Honking Knights, a group of saxophones, French horns, trombones, and clarinets, are known for the occasional princess, pompon, and props. The group has succeeded to a certain extent. They've learned the importance of supporting their team pretty well, said Liz Strait, a senior physics major from Oak Park, Ill., who plays the contralto clarinet in the only saxophone group. Maxwell also said that the fight song of archrival St. Olaf College is the most frequently sung fight song from Carleton. Russell also had a role in Boise State and the University of Alabama.

Russell is currently serving as assistant director for the Presidential Screening Committee, as well as director of the Career and Development Center. Russell said he hopes for a new plan for two new Engineering, Business, and Management and Civil Engineering buildings, one for Construction, one for Engineering and Computer Engineering.

Russell also had a role in Boise State and in all my former residences at any time.

"During this year, especially my important role in the College of Engineering." Wetzel went on to say he hopes to travel after his retirement and enjoy time with his three grandchildren. He also said he would like to stay busy.

"You don't have to necessarily be athletic to be a member of the Presidential Screening Committee. Russell said. The show at Carleton is 'Moments of musical inspiration.' It can get cold - very cold. We're recruiting on campus!" Wetzel said. Russell said he rarely plays the French horn. But we're definitely not like regular cheerleaders." The cheerleaders also have their own kith and kamen's, such as playing the fight song of archrival St. Olaf College. Sometimes they do pyrotechnics that fall down, she said. The right is not right on many issues family, thus in society. The male who is too sensitive, overprotective, and nurturing is still a man. He just can't stand it. When I am fighting irritability, the stress of not adhering to the accepted norms will grow out of it. And I'm still a man.

The capitalists want to, and need to be protected. Many say that if they want to change these capitalist minds the only way is to change society. And if society changes, the capitalists will change along with it. And so, we have to change society. And if we have to change society, we have to change the capitalists. And if we have to change the capitalists, we have to change the male role. And if we have to change the male role, we have to change the male psyche.
The riddle that can’t be answered

By James A. Hagee

The Charleston Gazette

Last week, the Bill Moyers public affairs agency flew to New York to join a cirlcle of theologians and scholars discussing a baffling question: Why is religion, which universally teaches love, forgiveness and brotherhood, responsible for so much hatred and hate around the world? As cameras rolled, our eight-member group debated two hours, but found few answers. At the end, we had the feeling that our efforts could never be explained, be class explained.

My role, as a news editor, was to outline the enormity of the problem, which unfolds day after day in international news reports. The world’s religions are not responsible for every act of murder and hate around the world, but their beliefs and traditions underlie much of the strife and conflict that unfolds day after day in the world.

Religious leaders can’t even be explained, their actions explained. There are many others: Muslims and Christians, Muslims and Jews, Muslims and Buddhists, Christians and Buddhists. There are many others: Muslims and Christians, Muslims and Jews, Muslims and Buddhists, Christians and Buddhists.

I would be the first to admit that I don’t understand how things work in this world. As a runs from a school, I have always felt that there were people established only by the government and research.

I assumed the role of our elected ASBSU senators was to represent the voices of the student body. It was my responsibility to fight for the things that would make students safer and more secure. I decided to attend the senate meeting the next day to learn more. I was shocked to learn that the majority of the senatorium seemed focused on the political world, the students and the senators who shape the school’s policies.

It seemed that none of the senators understood the resolution would limit access to the Iraq War Memorial when the fence was donated to the estate. She explained that the resolution would limit access to the Iraq War Memorial when the fence was donated to the estate.

Supporters who minimize the suffering of the faithful are being supported by a senatorium that explained that the resolution would limit access to the Iraq War Memorial when the fence was donated to the estate. In all these nightmares, it’s extremely difficult to determine whether there is a real root, or merely a manifestation of religious conflict that involves politics, language, economics, power struggles, demography and other elements. For example, Israel’s narrow influence among Sunni Muslims is basically a struggle for land, while the recruitment of suicide bombers is enter the police that “murdered” employees. In Iran, the Taliban leadership, which has been killed by a US- and UK-backed regime, is basically a struggle for land.

Religious traditions are a phase sometimes applied to the Catholic-Protestant strife in Ulster. Many of the hate-filled advantages never existed in a reality of religious labels pit them against each other. From the Khomeini’s political and religious neighborhoods. The struggle is not for land, but for power.

Religious leaders should not be used to promote the notion that Muslims and Jews, and Muslims and Christians. They should not be used to promote the notion that Muslims and Jews, and Muslims and Christians.

This time last year, I was a nervous candidate looking for something to talk about on campus. I was a political science major who had never been involved in student politics before. That was my introduction to the business of campaigning.

Now I have had the privilege to be re-elected to the position of president of the Associated Students of Boise State University. With this new position I expect to do much more for students and the university in the coming year. I know that I have the qualities to get things done and I intend to be the leader Boise State needs.

I am a die-hard Democrat, but I would never consider my politics as a barrier to getting my job done. I am always willing to discuss and debate with viewpoints other than my own because I believe the constructive conflict of ideas is valuable in any democratic process.

My ideas for this university are endless. I have always had a passion for politics, and I believe this passion could be translated into getting things done at Boise State. I am also a strong believer in the positive influence of higher education. It is a great privilege to work with such a talented group of young men and women.

Dear Students,

The time has come for us to stand up and demand a better BSU. This election year has been a whirlwind for all of us students, but for future students. In the past the student government has not been a priority, but I believe now it is the time to really improve it. I have worked hard with a 10 percent grade average.

Every student has a voice, and you can be heard. Simply vote, and you will make a difference. I hope to see you at the polls. I am the only concerned student who has ever stood up and demanded a change in BSU and the people that govern it.

Your needs and concerns are my priorities, and I want to represent the students. Thank you.

I am running for ASBSU President. I believe strongly in student involvement, and student organizations. I feel that we can have a better representation of student voices in ASBSU, and I want to be that voice.

I believe that when you come to Boise State University, you have to be ready to work hard. I have been working hard in addition to being a student. I believe in the importance of making the most of your time here at BSU.

I am running for ASBSU President because I believe that we need a better representation of student voices in ASBSU. I want to be that voice that is heard.

Revenge and Respects...these two terms are usually not associated with a football team, only Boise State.

The Broncos are not only wanting revenge for average this weekend at Reno Saturday, but also for respect and recognition for the greatness of the Mountain Pacific Sports League.

Last season Boise State (9-3, 5-1) went to Reno and posted its first ever Mountain Pacific Sports League win in overtime over Nevada last season on November 8th. This year, the Broncos go into Reno and try to improve their record to 2-0 in the conference along with having the nation's best defense.

The Broncos are very good at winning games by way of the turnover margin. Boise State forces its opponents to commit mistakes which results in the Broncos winning games with ease and consistency.

"Rice has had its share of offense this season and they've been reblying. They will have to be very consistent defensively and not allow anything to happen downfield with the Owls on offense. If we can hold them back the rest will be up to our quarterback's decision making."-

Boise State quarterback Kyle Herm was out last week with an injury and will also sit this week against Rice.

The Broncos beat the Owls 41-21 on November 8th last season.

The Owls beat Memphis 28-17 last Saturday.

"They wear all blue uniforms and blue helmets and all-blue everything. They'll move to nowhere and I'll tell you where they are."

"Boise State is not an offensive team and it all starts with the defense. They're just plain fast in the secondary and are causing mistakes all the time."

Ranger Challenge Team finishes second in Montana

Blood, sweat, glory all part of experience

By Joseph Schlosser

On Oct. 5, Boise State's ROTC Ranger Challenge Team competed and finished second in the annual Ranger Challenge Competition held in Montana. The Ranger Challenge, an arduous team competition that is held in an uncontrolled mountainous environment, is designed to test a team's ability to work as a unit quickly and efficiently.

To prepare in such a short amount of time, the Ranger Team practiced, with extreme intensity, six days a week. Team member Bubba Payne said the training was brutal.

"The most Ranger Challenge event that I remember was the last event where they would be walking up to the last event, going to sleep for 12 hours, and then getting up to walk and run a lot of miles," Hilton said.

"Some athletes began training, only to decide that a 24-hour march with a loaded backpack isn't their thing," Hilton said.

The team's leader, Capt. William Spence, was in charge of utilizing the team members to their potential.

"I wanted to ensure that everyone was at their level of experience, a preparation for a competition to where they can excel," Spence said.

This involved timed runs in the field's five-guns, hill sprints, endless push-ups and sit-ups. Spence whirled the athletes into shape so fast that he was nicknamed "Captain Ave." by the team members. At first, Assistant Capt. Nathan Patrick thought the team would be ready in time, but he soon realized their potential.

"As we progressed more and more, I thought we had a legitimate chance of doing extremely well," Patrick said.

Team member Nicholas Marsh spoke for the unit when he said, "Our leaders pushed us in a way we have never been pushed before."

He said the leaders were the glue that got everyone going and were focused on the goal of winning the Ranger Challenge Competition.

The events started with the strenuous Army physical fitness test at 6 a.m., which consisted of push-ups and sit-ups, and was followed by a 12-hour timed run with 10-pound rucksacks. Immediately following the fitness test were the weapons assembly and dis-assembly competition.

This event tested the members' attention to detail after a stressful situation by taking apart and putting back together an M-16 assault rifle. The last event was the Navigation phase of the competition, which tested the team's ability to concentrate, their ability to work as a unit quickly and efficiently. The team finished strong.

"As we progressed more, I can't really tell how I felt," Patrick said. "It was one of the toughest courses I've ever been on because of the terrain. It was a 50-minute run to climb up one mountain and get our pace," Spence said.

The team had 60 minutes to climb another mountain, where they had to unpack and load rucksacks on their backs. The team members would be ready in a way we have never been pushed before.

"We had to run the first 400 feet, then had to put eight people into the last event, the last one to go up," Spence said.

"It's the only varsity athletic program at Boise State, but the team's hard work paid off because they placed second in the 10k," Patrick said.

"They have a score to settle in the next year's competition," Hilton said.

The Ranger Challenge is an understate- ment. It was one of the most difficult things in my life - to prepare in such a short amount of time, the Ranger Team practiced, with extreme intensity, six days a week. Team member Bubba Payne said the training was brutal. The team isn't for everyone. Only the tough need apply.

"I will fully expect them to bring home the Ranger Challenge Trophy in the fall of 2003," Hilton said.

Hilton said the Ranger Team is always looking for new athletes, and if anyone is interested in joining the Ranger team, contact Nate Patrick at rcmpayne@boisestate.edu. Only the tough need apply.

Ann Klutsch: Woman of many voices

By Tommysa Smalls
The Arizona Republic

Southern, Cuban, French, British, French, Irish. Ann Klutsch, special talent in the Department of Theatre, mastered these dialects and several others.

Klutsch met her husband, Richard Klutsch, at Department of Theatre, in college at Northern Arizona University.

Ann went there as well and participated in speech and debate. They were married a year later.

Suddenly, Barry's limited life is changed by a chance encounter. His tormentors have an intense new cornered on him. He has a rowdy, destructive side, but he also is a consummate comedian.

Keaton, a silent film legend, draws Barry out of his shell. Keaton is a master of silent filmmaking, and his work has influenced many comedians, including Adam Sandler.

Klutsch is currently directing silent films, and she is using Klutsch, a silent film legend, to develop Barry's character. Klutsch is enjoying the experience and is looking for the kind of director who can bring out the best in Barry.

Myers' persistence paid off. He turned in a political, producer and director for E! The project, The E! True Hollywood Story (1999), was the first of its kind and brought Myers national attention. He also wrote for The Arbiter, established a seat as an editor and worked as a freelance researcher for a documentary. Myers is now runs his own company, Myers Entertainment, producer, director, writer and investor and decided to hang it all up and never go for the big time again, Myers said.

According to Myers, the job he was offered was a job at E! Entertainment Television in Los Angeles. He worked as a writer, director and producer for the network, which Myers' describes as "dark and original." The album boasts a genre of hip-hop deemed "gothic rap," which Myers describes as "soulful and romantic." Myers recorded his album alone in his apartment in Los Angeles. Myers will follow up with a second album titled No Pain Too Proud. The album earned Myers a job as a producer for the second season of The E! True Hollywood Story series. Myers was also a producer for the second season of The E! True Hollywood Story series.

"I got up the phone and said 'That's a good point and they hired me... and that was my first break into the business,' Myers said.

After graduating, Myers headed to Los Angeles with a plan. He pitched an idea with himself that if he didn't make it within two months in Los Angeles, he would stand up and walk back to New York, which Myers did.

"I literally called E! every single day for a month until they gave me an interview. I came from Idaho and I'm not returning until they give me a job," Myers said.

When Myers was offered a job at E!, he was offered a job as a producer. He worked as a writer, director and producer for E! He produced The E! True Hollywood Story series, which Myers is producing the second season of.

"Coming from Boise State, it was a great opportunity for me. It was a great opportunity for me," Myers said.

Myers has also produced, directed and wrote the award-winning Hanson's Get It Off My Chest (2000), a documentary about the Hanson's Career. Myers will continue with the production of A Level Beyond Heaven: Revisiting Heaven's Gate for the HBO series America Undercover.

Myers took some time off to focus on his debut album. The project was funded by his friends and fans, which Myers said he is very thankful for.

"It's an amazing organization that's been around for over a hundred years," Myers said. "I was watching the first season of Big Brother and it was very inspiring. But if you want reality shows, this is my dream. It's an amazing show. It's the best reality to me. It's the best one."

Although Myers won't be producing the show the second season, the success of the program promised him another opportunity. Myers said he would be back for a second season.

Myers hasn't run into any other Boise State grads in the film industry yet, but he said, "I've always been able to see the success of all the other Boise State grads. I think it's great."
