Healthy habits are key to getting a hold on midterm stress

BY ANNE ROBINSON

Health, Wellness and Counseling Services Special to The Arbiter

It is that time of year again. A cloud of midterm stress has hanged over campus and students in the Library trying to study several stressful marks of material, wondering the ways we can possibly get out of this. So, what drives us to think these kinds of thoughts?

The answer is stress. As students, during times of stress we tend to focus on our studies and lose our health. We end up grabbing a candy bar or soda for a pick-me-up during a grueling workout or pull an all-nighter up to 6 or 7 hours after we are eating and how we are eating our body impacts our academic abilities.

It is all too easy to skip a meal or go all nighter in order to squeeze in that last moment of study time, but it is very important to take care of ourselves when we are facing stressful situations. Unhealthy habits, stressors, and periods of extended study can be overwhelming and can lead to illness and self-esteem problems.

Krista Biegler, a political science senior and a volunteer for the Martin-Martinez campaign, said.

"The state's system is broken..." she explained. "...and that's why people are looking for a change in leadership. I think that's why people are looking for a change in our president." Biegler is a member of the Idaho Democratic Party and has volunteered for the Martin-Martinez campaign since the beginning of the year. She said she feels that the current system is failing to provide the representation that the people of Idaho need.

"The main reason for the open house is to introduce our students to the various clubs and organizations that are available to them," said Mark Sargent, the director of student activities. "We want to give them an opportunity to see what opportunities are available to them and to help them get involved in the community." The open house will be held on the campus from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Thursday, September 8, 2004. For more information, contact Mark Sargent at (208) 888-9999.

This article is an enlarged version of the article that appeared in the August issue of the Idaho Statesman. The article was written by journalist Sarah Johnson. The article discusses the importance of maintaining a healthy lifestyle and provides tips on how to achieve this goal.

"Fit people are not just people who exercise regularly," she said. "They also eat a balanced diet, get enough sleep, and take care of their mental and emotional health. A healthy lifestyle is essential for overall well-being and can help prevent a variety of health problems." Johnson also provided tips on how to maintain a healthy lifestyle, including tips on exercise, diet, and stress management.

What Should I Do If I'm In a Car Accident?

Dr. Decatur Reed
Legal Columnist

Statistically speaking, there is a 78 percent chance that you will be involved in a vehicle accident within the next 25 years. You may be the driver, passenger, bicyclist, or pedestrian. You may be physically injured, experience emotional distress, or incur property damage. Regardless of the case-specific facts, there are some things that should be done in any vehicle accident.

Every state has sovereignty over their roads and streets, limited only by federal law (specifics of which will be left for future articles). Let's review what the law requires in Idaho. If you're involved in a vehicle accident, you are required to do the following.

First, stop as near to the scene as is safely possible. It is legal to move vehicles before police arrive if the vehicles pose a traffic hazard. However, this may compromise the police investigation.

Second, call for police assistance if the property damage is more than $750 or if there is an injury. Call for medical assistance as soon as possible. Note that if the accident occurred on private property, police may not respond unless there is an injury.

Third, exchange information with others involved in the accident. Providing false information is a misdemeanor. Though witness information is not required, it would likely assist the police in their investigation.

Am I Required to Render Medical Assistance to Others?

If you are at fault in an accident, then your actions have put another person in a position of peril and this necessitates rescue. If you possess medical skill through formal medical training, then rendering first aid may be appropriate to avoid further liability exposure, but you must act reasonably and in good faith. Conversely, if you are not at fault, then your actions may expose you to further liability if you make the situation worse. Your actions may be protected by "Good Samaritan" laws, but you must act reasonably and in good faith. Failing to seek help can only increase your liability.

If you are a party to an accident in which there is an injury, Idaho law only requires that you render "reasonable assistance," including calling for medical help or performing medical care to an injured party. Idaho's Good Samaritan Law will protect you from civil liability if you act in a reasonable manner and in good faith.

If you are not directly involved in an accident, you are not legally required to render first aid to the involved parties, nor are you subjected to legal obligations to seek help for the injured. The primary exception occurs when you have a special relationship to the injured person, such as a parent to a child, guardian to a ward, or principal to an agent. This special relationship requires you to do that which is reasonably necessary to protect the person in your charge.

As the big emus, concrete deeds, and such are going on in East Germany, it is not going to be easy to move the wall on the West Bank. It involves the passage of the fires of the west. We shall be using the consent of the people, instead of expecting the mass revolt of the people. The wall is to be constructed, secretly, in protest against such generation. It is difficult, in building these walls, because of the small size of the town, and not enough people to organize. May 2, 1990

What are you afraid of?

BY CRYSTAL THOMAS

The saying that the Greeks are the first to count is a good one. But not everyone is. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown.

The thing is, people are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown. People are afraid of the unknown, the unknown.

What is your biggest fear in life?

"I'm afraid of heights."

"I'm afraid of the dark."

"I'm afraid of spiders."

"I'm afraid of the future."
The Bronco's football team stepped onto the grass at Leach Edwards Stadium Thursday night in an attempt to capitalize on their traditionally strong showing game vs. BYU. Their last meet-up against the Cougars, in 1999, ended up with a 42-12 spitting and 4-12 rating. This weekend, the Bronco's offense came out and hit the Cougars with a 36-12 victory. This was a great win for the team, and a much-needed victory for their season. The Broncos' defense was strong, leading to 12 sacks and four interceptions. The offense was led by senior quarterback Dave Wilson, who completed 18 of 31 passes for 263 yards and two touchdowns. The game was a great test for the Bronco's, and a testament to their ability to come back and win. The Bronco's next opponent is the University of Hawaii, and they will need to continue to work hard to prepare for that game. The Broncos' offense will need to continue to perform at a high level, while the defense will need to keep up their strong performance. Overall, it was a great win for the team, and they will look to keep the momentum going as they prepare for their next game.
