Kustra details university achievements, goals in address

BY ANDY BENSON

Boise State President Bob Kustra addressed the Boise City Council on Tuesday night during his state of the university address. Kustra told members of the council that Boise State is prepared to respond to the city's need for economic development.

"We are ready to respond to the city's need for economic development," Kustra said. "We are prepared to play a significant role in strengthening ties between the university and the city." He said the university is ready to work with the city to create a "University City" that will be a hub of economic activity.

Boise Mayor Dave Bieter's 33-member transition team is a broad cross-section of the community. The idea of the team is to take a look at various aspects within the community, including the relationship with Boise State. Boise State President Bob Kustra met with the transition team on Tuesday.

"At the end of the day, we hope to come out with balanced ideas that we can implement for the good of the university and the city," said Mayor Bieter in connection with the transition team. An independent survey found that students in Utah are more likely to take rigorous classes than they need to in order to be prepared for college.

The state's K-12 education reformers are working to improve the state's education system, which they say is lagging behind the national average. The group is calling for an increase in teacher pay and a reduction in class sizes to improve the quality of education.

The group is also calling for the state to provide more support to struggling schools and to ensure that all students have access to high-quality education.

In addition, the group is advocating for the state to increase funding for schools and to provide more resources to support teachers and students.

The state's education commissioner, Richard Martin, said that the state is making progress, but that more work needs to be done to improve the quality of education.

"We are making progress, but we still have a long way to go," Martin said. "We need to continue to make improvements in our schools and to ensure that all students have the opportunity to succeed."
Clark's campaign creating a buzz in New Hampshire

BY DANA BILL

CONCORD, N.H. — The presidential campaign of former Gov. Wesley Clark is about to hit the ground running as the front-runner's move to New Hampshire has put him in clear second place behind former Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders in polls. Clark's campaign is creating a buzz in New Hampshire, with former Congresswoman Ali Ishaq and Michael Blankenship, dean of the social science and public affairs college at Boise State, urging_cos, to bring a "Higher Standard of Leadership" to the White House.

Clark closed the gap on his leading rival, Sanders, and is a leading candidate in the New Hampshire primary on Jan. 27. The latest independent poll shows Sanders in the lead with 35 percent support.

Clark's movement is real," said Andy Smith, the director of the University of New Hampshire. "I was very active in going that way. I was very active in going to Steve's (Sanders') mail-in votes, but I was doing it for Clark. And I was doing it out of personal interest." Clark said he was interested in Sanders' campaign because it was "a sense that people are looked ing for a candidate other than Obama." Smith said Clark is a candidate who "can raise money and pack a house." There is a sense that people are looking at the primary option,

 the most promising.

 that way. "I was very active in going

Free trade...but...

BE MICHAEL KINSLEY

In my February 2-3rd column, I noted that the Democratic party had apparently decided to declare free trade a dead issue. But it appears the party has changed its mind.

The New York Times reported last week that Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., plans to introduce this week a free-trade bill that would give special treatment to the Chilean beef and pork industries. The bill is supported by President Bush.

This is a curious development. It seems to contradict the party's recent turn to the left on economic issues. And it raises the question of how long the party will remain committed to free trade.

Schumer's bill is not a surprise. He has been a strong advocate of free trade in the past. But his support for it now could be interpreted as a sign of the party's commitment to this issue.

The bill is likely to face opposition from some Democrats in Congress, who are concerned about the impact of free trade on American workers. But Schumer's support for the bill could signal a shift in the party's position on this issue.

It is not clear how long the party will remain committed to free trade. But it seems likely that the party will continue to support free trade, given the economic benefits it provides.

Making Headlines With Negotiations, Not Confrontations

BY JOSEPH CHERNOCK
Special to The Washington Post

In the past few weeks we have witnessed a series of changes in the most dangerous global nuclear proliferation threats. Rather than leading to regional military conflicts, the United States seems to be meeting such dangers head on and negotiating solutions that are not only tentative but hold extraordinary promise. This is especially relevant because they were entirely unrelated.

Just how significant is the achievement in South Asia? The answer can be found in the high-tech equipment needed to build nuclear weapons, but also in the war in Iraq. The war In Iraq must have had some effect. But going further is where the real change comes in. Conservative pundits are quick to claim that the United States and its allies were weaponizing the war In Iraq. We disagree. Perhaps. Little evidence supports the notion that both countries did not feel the need to buy some of it—vorto steal it. But war is a dirty business, and costs and few allies.

In Iraq, the administration can’t even claim that the United States has any International or diplomatic support. Afghanistan, let alone mount major new military operations in South Asia. The great danger was that Iran, Iraq, North Korea, and Pakistan accounting for the war In Iraq must have had some effect. But going further is where the real change comes in. Cold Mountain lacks heated plot of the Ayatollah Khomeini in 1989. The law requires that all films, they show an even greater variety of religious editing) when these films refer to their own faiths. One problem with this is that many of the Arab world, including its film industry, has been an indefatigable supporter of the United States. But perhaps more importantly, women there have been able to participate in their own homes. Women are well known, has shot films considered innocent and therefore screen freedom.

Was making a movie that quite seem to follow a standard cinematic rhythm: the viewer is1 a lot of effort in terms of the plot and somewhat fictitious war. The result is a story between two young lovers and hard-nosed soldiers. It's a film about a man whose body betrays him and his life is under constant threat, and whose character's death is death. The movie is a story of a man who can't afford to be killed. His Low profile, he is the improbableрид Edge.

It is forbidden, however, for Islamic filmmakers to portray adultery between men and women, even if they were married. Moreover, women are not even permitted to be shown in the privacy of their homes. In such films as "The White Tulip" and "Black Tulip," the main woman is shown either wearing a veil over her face or being seen only from behind. Even in these cases, she is not shown as an independent entity but rather as a mere reflection of her male counterpart. This is interesting to note as the film industry in these countries is considered to be a reflection of society. Therefore, its portrayal of women is not only a reflection of the society's view of women but also a reflection of the society's view of itself. This is the reason why the film industry in these countries is considered to be such an important part of society.

The same goes for the "opt-out" email registry. This is an interesting, albeit somewhat frustrating, piece of legislation that was passed last year in California. The idea behind it is that if you don't want to receive spam, you should opt-out. But the problem with this is that it's likely to be unenforceable. It's easy for spammers to make "opt-out" links and you're likely to receive more spam.

The act also authorizes, but doesn't require, the Federal Trade Commission to create a "do-not-email" list for commercial e-mail. This commission would then cull from the list of Americans to whom commercial e-mail is supposed to guard the national interest.

The Commission is statutorily authorized to take such actions as it deems necessary or appropriate to prevent commercial e-mail from being sold, bartered, or otherwise transferred in a form that would allow anyone to access it.

Moore opens wallet again, for V. Guerrero

BY WILL SHAEKEN
Los Angeles Times

ANAHEIM, Calif. — In a winning move that established the Anaheim Angels as World Series title favorites, the team has announced the signing of free agent slugger Vladimir Guerrero, the team’s third biggest signing so far in the off-season.

Guerrero, a relatively anonymous sweeper who is expected to be the team’s most powerful offensive threat, is expected to bring a bat that produces at least 40 home runs and 120 RBIs per season.

The Angels did not enter the Guerrero sweepstakes until Thursday, a stealth entry by the Los Angeles Rams of the National Football League. Even the team’s general manager, Bill Stoneman, did not know of the negotiations.

Although the Angels had informed the New York Mets that they had all but emptied their wallets
and waiting for more attractive opportunities, they were unaware of the negotiations.

The team agreed to a five-year contract for Guerrero, a vacancy at first base. They were aware that Guerrero sat out 39 games last season, hitting from .307 to .345. He also scored and drove in 100 runs and was blessed with one of baseball’s two-thirds. He was hit by
disk in his back, but the injury was not expected to require surgery and he return to play in 62 of the Angels’ final 64 games.

Guerrero was not expected until a player passed availability of Guerrero and the opportunity to sign him immediate was seized. The team, in the item, another reader,
ruled out the possibility of injury. In Guerrero and Bartolo
