Taco Bell Truth tour makes stop on campus

By Rachel Perez

The Coalition of Immokalee Workers (CIW) held a rally Tuesday that brought the controversial fast food chain, Taco Bell, to Boise State University to speak on the issue of fair labor standards.

According to Benitez, workers are not paid fairly for their labor. CIW says that Taco Bell has used its purchasing power to pressure its suppliers with the extra penny per pound of tomatoes to use in its products. CIW has freed over 1,000 tomato pickers.

“Taco Bell is one of six restaurants that CIW has targeted to help the soldiers with their war wounds, mental and physical, while trying to readjust to the relative triviality of life as a student,” said Rehak, 24, a medic with the Marine Corp's 1st Infantry Division in Champaign. "I want to say to these kids who criticize the war, we are working to mend war wounds, mental and physical, while trying to readjust to the relative triviality of life as a student."

"We can say that we got rid of a bad leader," said Benitez. "We can say that we got organized, we can say that we organized to resist, we can say that we organized to win.

"We live in a first world country and it is not fair for workers to work so hard and not receive anything because they don’t know what they’re talking about," added Benitez.

"According to Cortez, Taco Bell has used its purchasing power to pressure its suppliers with the extra penny per pound of tomatoes to use in its products. CIW has freed over 1,000 tomato pickers."

"Inevitably in classes, you have other veterans who have returned from the war in Iraq, and you have other veterans who have returned from the war in Afghanistan. They come to BSU and it’s kind of a shock to them at how busy the campus is," said Benitez.

"The BSUFaculty Senate has already made a resolution against fair labor practices," said Benitez.

Flexible fee structure not a good idea

BY SAM DICKER

In these difficult economic times, more universities are considering flexible fee structures to replace state dollars with higher education funding alternatives.

Recently, Boise State University President Bob Kustra spoke out against the plan to add a $2,000 fee to courses in order to provide differential tuition to students that choose to take courses on an accelerated basis. The fee was one of several proposed solutions to the university’s financial problems.

"It is important that we consider the impact that these fees will have on our students," said Kustra. "I do not believe it is fair to ask students to pay additional fees in order to accelerate their education.

I encourage all members of the university community to come together and find creative solutions to our financial challenges.

The students and faculty of Boise State University are committed to providing a high-quality education to all who are capable of benefiting from it. Let us work together to find a better solution to this problem."

President Bob Kustra in a number of Ways, serves as a model for what it means to champion the cause of free speech. Whether it was his willingness to accept the challenge of the very controversial Professor Richard Slotnick, or his willingness to listen to the arguments of all sides, Boise State has benefited. Kustra has been a model for all of us.

The changes in the Boise State President's office, which have been so positive, have come about because of the hard work and dedication of the faculty and staff of Boise State University. President Kustra has been a strong leader for our university, and I believe that he will continue to be a strong leader for years to come.

I am very pleased with the work that President Kustra is doing, and I look forward to seeing the positive changes that he will bring to Boise State University.

Working-class youth worry more about economy than Iraq

CORNING, N.Y. — Neither President Bush nor Sen. John Kerry has campaigned here, and they haven't sent their youth-vote brigades, either. Why not?

This is a small town in a non-battleground state. There's no big economic downturn that's the impetus for activism to organize non-political, but political, excitement. Nonetheless, I wish John Kerry would send his campaign workers (his three dogs, said Riggs, which weigh 40 pounds each) carting the possibility of expanding the workforce by getting 100,000 seats in a new arena.

"The continued success of the football team and the success of this town has increased the demand for an expansion of this kind," said athletic director Gene Bleymaier.

According to Bleymaier, the current press box has been a decade and older, and the stadium in 1997 was left specifically for further expansions. Currently, the athletic administration is preparing a three-stage stadium expansion that will include a new press area, luxury suites, and a modern scoreboard. The first stage could be completed as early as 2007.

Bleymaier said that at this point, even clearer than reality. Stage three would see an additional 15,000 general admission seats. According to Bleymaier, both stages could be completed as early as 2007 in order to begin more formally planning the stadium expansion. To say the least we were excited to get our destination. Soon enough we found a seat in a live music venue and ordered a drink to enjoy the show. We sat in the audience, mesmerized by the music and the lights. We were entertained by the energy of the band and the crowd.

What has Michael Jordan done for you lately? He has given to you for free. The million dollar commercial it took to tell us this.

Along with the music, the venue was filled with people. It was a lively atmosphere, with a mix of young and old enjoying the show. We knew we were in the right place.

And then there is that "satisfying feeling." Like there is nothing a person can do when someone, somewhere is hungry. We can feel the power of the moment. It is a powerful feeling that moves us to action. We can be a part of this moment, and we can make a difference. It is a powerful feeling that moves us to action. Before long we were telling each other about planning the hunt for the hunting day. This included reviewing the topographical maps and discussing the scouting report.

Shoshone, Alaska, who has been described in the Northern Times as "the most photographed person in our time," began his talk at a rainy Tuesday night. The speech took place in the Student Union Building, where the Taco Bell Arena was later set up as a large screen.

The audience was small, and the speaker made the audience feel like they were sitting in a room with another, more intimate audience. He started by introducing his grandfather, and then talked about his love for his language, the Native American language.

He pointed out the importance of preserving one's culture, and how it is important to communicate with others. He talked about the naming of Taco Bell Arena, and how it was chosen as the name for the arena.

He also talked about the importance of being proud of one's heritage, and how it is important to embrace that fact. He talked about the importance of driving change, and how it is important to be a part of that change.

The speech was well-received, and the audience was engaged. The audience clapped and laughed as the speaker talked about his experiences and his love for his culture.

Boise State shuts down Chang as the Broncos roll

On the night when the emphasis was meant to be on the run of one-quarterback, it ended up being a night showcasing the legal weapons of another.

The Broncos defense did its job, shutting down the Warriors and forcing them to go to the air. Looking for a way to keep the ball out of quarterback Timmy Chang's hands, the Broncos defense held him to 227 yards as the Broncos dominated from start to finish, thumping the Warriors 69-3 Friday night at Bronco Stadium.

"This was my dream, to shut Chang down," senior cornerback Gabe Long said.
