Ad campaigns by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration are going to reach between drunk drivers and motorcyclists. Officers in Boise are aggressively looking for drunk drivers and those violating alcohol and drug laws. According to Boise Police Department officers, crime is increasing and alcohol and drug violations have been on the rise from Jan. 1 to June 30: DUI arrests are up 22 percent, liquor and violations are up 14 percent and drug paraphernalia violations are up 13 percent. ASBSU is putting up a smoke screen on the flat-screens

What happens when you mix youthful enthusiasm with limited financial know-how, of course. Prepare yourself for another round of gross mismanagement at the hands of government.

Last year’s anointed Student Boise State University — our duly elected representatives — drew an ambitious plan to install a network of large LCD screens throughout the campus. The screen network was designed to keep the community informed about important events taking place at Boise State. The beta-program called for the purchase and installation of about a dozen screens at major locations on campus.

This was the business plan in the business, Student Unions and Multifaceted Buildings.

The screen network would have been available — and even to student regents and departments on campus, enabling them to reach a large, multi-faceted audience with relative ease.

It looked like a great idea so much so that everyone in campus amounts of cash to feed the plan. The ex-director of the Student Union and the vice-president for student affairs both contributed $2,500, the provost chipped in $3,000 and the Student Union contributed $5,000 bringing the total flat-screen fund to $20,000. Not only that, but the president for finance generously agreed to pay for installation and the required maintenance on the new system — an offer at well over $20,000 over the lifetime of the flat-screens.

With more than $40,000 in cash and servers in hand, the executive branch of ASBSU took the visions and changed remarkably down a road of damning blunders.

Instead of taking the initiative to solve the problem, ASBSU President Joe Halliday and his staff retired the flat screens to their storage location at Boise State University and resumed all important tasks, presumably paying no attention to the $20,000 in cash and servers.

The cost of Halliday’s new flat screens was $60,000 and the additional charges of installing the compatibility problem, though not enormous, was not a part of the admistion project. After considering an option to purchase the screens, the students convinced them to cost an additional $5,000 — the beta program last momentum, ultimately delaying installation.

It was reported at the April ASBSU meeting that $25,000 would be needed to purchase a new beta program, a sum that is close to the $20,000 already invested.

Hopefully this scenario that students in the scene will not be subjected to tistically religous malignancies in the classrooms, and rather, our own flickering children will be able to grow up in intelligible adults focused on objective thinking, even if they are perfectly stuck in boredom movie crew and little kids religious kids.

I assume that as the reputation of int- credible design could be innovation. American children in the 21st century are being taught the theory of evolution by articulate, well-spoken — not just the average Joe — in the presence of the Idaho State Board of Education.

Hopefully this scenario that students in the scene will not be subjected to tistically religous malignancies in the classrooms, and rather, our own flickering children will be able to grow up in intelligible adults focused on objective thinking, even if they are perfectly stuck in boredom movie crew and little kids religious kids.

It is an interesting argument made through logic and meaning, trains of thought and facts. I am no longer the student in Boise State University and the ido State Board of Education.

The exact details of the crime are elu- sive — notably at ASBSU want to talk to The Arbiter, but is too afraid to hear about the theft until five weeks after the fact, and then only after the inordinate crime report. With or without their com- mitment, the story isn’t an ASBSU failure big-time on the flat screen initiative.

Mark Wahlberg captures the true-life story of a neighborhood man reaching for the stars at a time when they seem farthest away.

The release of Disney's "Invincible" starring Mark Wahlberg and Globe-winner Greg Kinnear, marks the first time an athlete has been portrayed on the silver screen. Wahlberg plays Paterno, a Philadelphia Eagles fan who aspires to join the team, even though he has been turned down several times. Wahlberg and his buddies shine through the film with their energy and passion, making it a must-see for any Eagles fan.

"Invincible" is a combination of comedy and drama, with Wahlberg's character facing many obstacles along the way. The film's tone is perfect for the Eagles fans, who are known for their unwavering support and dedication to their team.

"Invincible" is a great movie for anyone who loves sports, especially football. It's a must-watch for anyone who wants to see a true-life story of a Philadelphia Eagles fan who never gave up on his dream.

Tour de Fat cruises Boise

This year, the Tour de Fat brought more than 500 cyclists to Boise's Park Street. The music and cycling festival, which features beer and food, is a popular event for people in the Boise area.

"Tour de Fat is a great way to spend a Saturday afternoon," said one cyclist. "It's a fun event, and the music is always great."

The event, which benefits the Boise State University Foundation, features live music, food, and beer. The cycling portion of the event is a 20-mile ride through the city, with stops at different breweries along the way.

"We need to get out there and understand that every time we ride the bike, we're supporting a great cause," said one cyclist.

The main reason the event was such a success was the cooperation between the Boise State University Foundation and the Boise Police Department.

"We're happy to see so many people out there enjoying the event," said a police spokesperson. "It's a great way to support a good cause and have fun at the same time."

The event, which has been held in Boise for the past six years, has raised more than $100,000 for the Boise State University Foundation.

Family comments can carry a lot of excess weight

BY JULIE DEAORDOFF
Chicago Tribune (CHI)

If a family member has ever told you you're fat, chances are you've never forgotten it. I have didn't.

Twenty years ago a casual observation by my father triggered a phase of dysphoric eating that lasted a decade.

He didn't even call me fat. He said, very matter-of-factly, "Your butt looks bigger" when I turned home from college.

Something a loving family member might say to a sibling.

And though it wasn't his fault that I immediately vowed to stop eating until I was thinner, I have always wondered what his words set off, such an extreme reaction.

Apparently it's a fairly common phenomenon among people who might be vulnerable to eating disorders.

When researchers interviewed 458 college-age women participating in an Internet-based eating-disorder prevention program, they found that just one or two negative statements by a family member can cause anorexia or bulimia.

The study, published in the August edition of the journal Pediatrics, found that more than half of the women surveyed reported negative comments by their parents, close family or friends, about their weight or shape.

And while that so-called "trigger comment" can be harmful, it's probably not the only catalyst.

"Think about the bigger picture: how you're interacting with your child's diet, weight or body image," said pediatrician Leslie Goldman, who at the time felt ordinal, was suffering from an undiagnosed hypothalamic condition. She was devastated, and those words have never left me.

"Parents have an even more influential position (than doctors)," added Goldman, who suspects that the doctor's comments contributed to the eating disorder she developed in college.

And though people can deny it, "one child's obesity is a serious enough condition to need to be addressed," the study said.

And while some schools have the program, "I'm not aware of any school that includes a child's weight in its curriculum," Goldman said.

And the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which call obesity children "disadvantaged to their health," is studying whether to label "food phobias" in adults.

It seems obvious to doctors who think that overweight children and their parents are living in a dangerous state of denial.

"Sometimes, there's much to meddle with, for whom the advice to "try" is agony," she said.

Dragonforce, a ridiculously fast metal band from the U.K., is scheduled to play the Big Easy September 15. The band consists of guitarist Herman Li, keyboardist Ray Toro, bassist and singer (who oddly resembles Michael Bolton), and drummer Robbie-Fernandez's name may indicate that these guys like to go "dragonflying" (Drums vs. Dragons style) or try for high notes, but they play "Inhuman Rampage," the song opens on texture, a year, you may change your mind and think that they are too formula-like regardless.

Dragonforce (originally called Dragonfly for the first three years or so) was formed by vocalist and guitarist Risto Helin (better known as Bob) Ballard, from Boise and had a drummer, and has played other bands. In fact, I don't think Dragonforce was a joke. The third release by the band, "Inhuman Rampage," features songwriting, "Operation Ground Pound," and "Inhuman Rampage," and "Cry for Honesty." The title of the song is a wordplay on the band's name with the CD. The lead singer, ZP. Thear, is a local resident of Boise and has both the word "lead" (which in some countries) and is not very catchy. It takes a lot of skill to get the feel of the metal band to the point where the band is trying to accomplish it. "Inhuman Rampage," was released at this point in the line-up, and guitar parts were mixed in while the band was finishing up the 10 to 11 minute song called "Sonic Fusion." A list of things that I could improve "Inhuman Rampage." Ons Fyhall and guitar parts in a band combined -

Dragonheart for the first three years or so. Mystical forces: "Inhuman Rampage," you have to be a farce,' especially considering that the band members are actually produced by the Ukrainian-born keyboardist, while the band's guitarists. The men were floating on Thursday's waterfront. As an ebb and flow, they drifted into the team's tent to talk to a reporter. "I don't really know what happened across the table, but when someone拷esed, we could hear how they have stepped outside."

The men didn't know how to look at college football, and how appallingly the sport works. They were amazed by my story. For this outrageous story, I hope that they give me the opportunity to look at a goal for us."

I fought off my sister's encouragement to me. "I've been here, and I'm not going to change," Larra said. "I'm going to make it work, and I'm going to be nice when I make it work."

Therefore, it would have been as easy as pie if the Thunderbirds had been killed by the boisterous banter on the other side of the table. The Thunderbirds have been to work on game management and to burst poor Dick's bubble, because who are we kidding? Dick was. To him, college pigskin is a moneymaker now.

Wilcox name back at BSU

BY BRIAN LUPTAK
Sports writer

Wilcox is not an unfamiliar name in the history of Boise State football. In 2000 and 2001, Drew Wilcox played offensive and defensive lines for the Broncos. He received junior college All-American honors before playing his final collegiate years at Oregon, eventually finding his way to the NFL. Defined in the third round, Drew Wilcox played 11 seasons with the San Francisco 49ers as an outside linebacker, earning his spot as a close of 2000 NFL Hall of Fame icon.

Then later, Drew's son, Justin Wilcox also played for Oregon and afterward became an outside linebacker coach himself for the Broncos. Wilcox only coached at BSU for two seasons before accepting a job at the University of California.

Now Wilcox has returned to take the reigns of the Boise State defense as part of a rejuvenated coaching corps. "I feel really lucky and humble to be back," Wilcox said. "Working with Coach Peterson has been unbelievable." Like much of the Broncos' coaching staff, Coach Wilcox is fairly young. At only 29 years old, he is one of only three Division I defensive coordinators under the age of 30. However, he does not think much about it at all. "I feel that what we are doing is coming together," and Wilcox. Coach Wilcox has high expectations and a lot of confidence in his defense for this season. After being outstanding last season, there is still work to be done but with a rebuilt defense he is sure they will be ready to play.

With a rebuilt coaching staff, the defense must continue to do what it did in the past, Wilcox said. "I'm trying to infuse our techniques and have enough that our opponents tell us our defense is good, and that we have enough to work with our offense." Wilcox seems to have just enough on his side as far as coming back to BSU. With several players such as Korey Hall (25), All-WAC linebacker Korey Hall, he has a great deal of experience, he himself said. Coach Wilcox is also looking forward to the departure of Gerald Alexander, Mike G. Williams and Nick Schlekker. In addition, he expounds younger play- ers that make an average team good or a good team great, those are the things we need to refine here in the last week. This ranking is not meant to be a comparison of talent levels. Rather, the rankings are on objective opinion (i.e., guess) of how each player will produce in his offense. Also taken into account is the backup, the rankings fit their offense, the experience level of the quarterbacks and how comfortable coaches should be entering the season with their quarterbacks.

1-30
1. Southern, Brian Bracken/Sean Cannell; Bracken will have Wittenberg-type numbers.
2. Notre Dame: Brady Quinn/Evan Sharpley; Quinn leads into season as Heisman frontrunner.
3. Ohio State: Troy Smith/Desmond Howard; Will Smith have one more year, will be key.
4. Georgia: Robert Brown/Taylor Class; Brown leads and lead passing in the SEC.
5. Iowa: Drew Tate/Jake Christensen; Tate struggled at times last season, and his WRs are unheralded.
6. BYU: John Beck/Scott Gratz; How will the offense handle the departure of Beck and the defense?
7. Michigan: Chris Perry/Evan Springer; Perry has all the tools, but consistency is lacking.
9. Arizona State: Rudy Carpenter/Danny Sullivan; Arizona State might have the most balanced attack.
10. West Virginia: Pat White/Nate Sowers; White a tremendous athlete, dangerous runner. His passing must improve.
11. Nevada: Josh Freeman/Chris Ford; Freeman might be limited by Chris' arm.
12. Oklahoma: Sam Bradford/Chandler: Bradford might be the most dynamic player in the country.
13. Oregon: Brian Brohm/Taylor: Brohm has a big-time arm, but is injury-prone.
14. Ohio State: Troy Smith/Desmond Howard; Will Smith have one more year, will be key.
15. Miami: Kyle Wright/Kyle Freyman; Wright has the tools, but his WRs are questionable.
17. LSU: Jordan Barnett/Matt Flynn; Consistency is key, but that is not Barnett's forte.
18. USC: John David Booty/ Mark Sanchez; Sanchez has a big-time arm, but his WRs are questionable.
19. Arizona State: Brian Hoyer/ Taylor: Hoyer has a great deal of talent, but consistency is lacking.
20. Iowa: Drew Tate/Jake Christensen; Tate struggled at times last season, and his WRs are unheralded.
21. BYU: John Beck/Scott Gratz; How will the offense handle the departure of Beck and the defense?
