It costs more and more every fall to pay for an education at Boise State University. There is an undercurrent of growth, both in buildings and in educational goals, pulsing through our hallways, tracing the synapses in our brains and lacing the conversation on the quad. That growth is happening so fast that we are running out of time to keep up. I can’t tell you exactly how much our tuition is going to rise. I will tell you it is guaranteed to do so. All I give you is the information detailing the possible increases, and offer you the slot in time by which you may speak your opinion of such increases. That opportunity comes Wednesday from 1-5 p.m. in the Lookout Room on the top floor of the Student Union Building. It is then when any students who wish to speak for or against these increases may give testimony to their opinions. The proposed increases will raise student fees $2,077 to $2,268.65. The increases will not all be approved. It is rumored that the State Board of Education will only approve between a five and seven percent increase, so many of these requests will be denied, no matter their importance to the future of BSU. Some will be given discounted funds and others will be negated entirely.

The discussion process is complicated. Organizations ask for increases. The Associated Students of BSU Senate gives recommendations. Students are allowed to speak at the Fee Hearings Wednesday. The Associated Students of BSU President Wyatt Parke and Vice President Molly George take the recommendations to the Student Fee Proposal Committee, of which they are voting members. Also on that 16-member committee are Stacy Pearson, VP of Finance; Sons Andrews, provost; Michael LaLiberte, VP of Student Affairs and two other students. That committee makes recommendations to the State Board of Education, who in turn, takes the totals to the SBOE for final approval. The State Board ultimately decides how much the university can raise its fees. There is a cap of 10 percent.
College behind bars

In some ways, Randy Gutierrez is like a lot of other 19-year-olds. He is currently enrolled in a bachelor’s degree program at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. He is a college student, he is in love and he will have his 18th birthday next month. But he is also a prisoner, serving a 15-year sentence at Western Correctional Institution near Wendy Erisman, senior research scientist for the Correctional Education Association and Corrections Learning Network and co-author of a report on the success of inmate college programs.

Despite these differences, Gutierrez and other inmates are learning that college is possible for them. The prison in Milwaukee offers an inmate college program, which is part of a national initiative to provide educational opportunities for prisoners.

The program provides inmates with access to a range of courses, including math, English, social sciences and more. Inmates who participate in the program are able to earn college credits, which can help them earn a degree or certification upon release.

ASBSU seeks candidates for president, vice president and senate seats

Politically inclined students can dream, Tracy Kidder, will speak at 7 p.m. on Feb. 28 in the student union Special Events Center at Boise State University. The event is open to the public, and tickets are not required. Seats will be available on a first come, first served basis and free parking will be available in the Liberal Arts parking lot located between the Student Union Building and the Special Events Center.

Kidder, originally from New York City, attended Harvard College. He served in Vietnam from 1967 to 1969 and was awarded a Bronze Star.

After returning from the war, he attended the University of Iowa Writers Workshop, earning a masters of fine arts degree.

While in Iowa, he met Dan Wakefield, a contributing editor at "The Atlantic Monthly," and the two decided to try a novel. "Big Boys Don't Cry," for which Kidder won the Pulitzer Prize and National Book Award.

Kidder has written other publications, including "The New Yorker," and is the author of "The Soul of the New Machine," for which he was given the Pulitzer Prize and National Book Award.

Proctoring at Boise State have been reading Kidder's book "Mountains Beyond Mountains: The Quest of Dr. Paul Farmer, A Man Who Would Cure the World" as part of the Common Reading Program.

The students received their books before the start of the academic year. The university has developed events around the book and it is being used as a teaching tool. Themes from the reading will also be the focus of a series of films.

Kidder met Paul Farmer, the subject of "Mountains Beyond Mountains" in 1994 while in Haiti reporting on American soldiers working to retrain the government there.

Farmer called "The Good Doctor," Iowa Writers Workshop, earning a masters of fine arts degree.

"I mentioned a similar program on another campus and was personally struck by the strong message it sends to students," Kidder said.

"Any university faculty or employee can be a candidate," Kidder said. "I introduced a similar program on another campus and was personally struck by the strong message it sends to students.

The Associated Student Body seeks candidates for the president, vice president and senate seats, as well as 34 conferences, 169 journals and 34 panes of all of these talented professors. "Any university faculty or employee can be a candidate," Kidder said. "I introduced a similar program on another campus and was personally struck by the strong message it sends to students.

Students struggle with transportation

Driving vehicles on University Drive and wanting to get out of high speed traffic on Capital Boulevard can be quite risky. Students may notice a particular influx of traffic around Boise State University this semester. Excessive speed is an absolute high, yes, with a bigger student population comes bigger problems, the heart of which is parking on campus.

"The amount of events have gone up tremendously," Nicole Bandas, operations manager for Boise State Parking and Transportation Services said. "2017 was my first year and to the football season alone there parking attendants were bi.

Bandas went on to say there were seven instances during the last two basketball seasons where a parking attendant was at least brushed by a vehicle. When dealing with a population who wants things right now, one gets to know who is the person doing that and what they discharge in our face, as well as whoever is in their path."

Bandas added the individuals doing the vehicles that struck the attendants became angry when they found out they couldn't park where they wanted and stopped paying attention. Bandas received word that construction activities for the Bronco State Parking and Transportation Services, the current 273 General parking spaces, will fall to 95. And Parking and Transportation Services, limited on University Drive, across from the Student Union Building, students and faculty can receive estimates. They can place this sticker on the front of their student identification card and the first time they will fine a fine of $50.

 Boise State connects with Valley Ride transit, simply by being a student or faculty in Boise State, you can obtain a free bus pass. A going to Parking and Transportation Services, limited on University Drive, across from the Student Union Building, students and faculty can receive estimates. They can place this sticker on the front of their student identification card and the first time they will fine a fine of $50.

Boise State senior Luke Sturdy does not have a parking permit. He said he gave up on getting one last year and that he doesn't even know where he lost his first ticket he ever had from the Boise State police. Bandas said, "I know the more people that we can turn on the first time they will fine a fine of $50.Each time you lose a permit you lose on about four years ago.

"I do have parking at Anne Morrison or Julia Davis Park and walking from there," Bandas said.

He knew about bus routes in a few years ago yet he didn't find out where they were and how they used to be on campus.

So I show up, first time in the place, and this is fun as hell, man. I'm here alone. Here's what happens. You drop into a little place where you interact with other avatars, including those of real-life friends. You may be "Silas" by day, but Silas is not a god on Second Life. You get setup, you buy clothes, you buy your character, you buy your gear, you buy your clothes, you buy your hair, shop, set up shop, trade art, and even, yes, even NGC art. It's a must have to keep her potentially express-ive. In the end, what you do is Second Life is all about your money in real currency. If you want to buy a super kool 3D Mickey That's because it's my first entry into Second Life, the trained, trained, and trained virtual online role-playing game and social networking site that's being hailed as the next world of Virtual Reality. We're flocking to the site to set up "local" economies; we're creating our own virtual lives. There's a shape, a flavor name and create one avatar, an animat- which keeps on changing as you grow. To make things more interesting, there are two major economies that can be found in Second Life, and those are the economy of real-world goods and services. The other economy is the economy of virtual goods and services. The virtual economy is a separate economy, separate from the real-world economy. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services.

Most of the items in the virtual world are virtual goods and services. Some are being sold to real-world customers, while others are being sold to virtual-world customers. The virtual economy is a separate economy, separate from the real-world economy. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services. It's a separate economy that can be found in Second Life, and that's the economy of virtual goods and services.

It is now so vast in size that it is easy to get lost in it. You can easily spend hours exploring the virtual world, and it is easy to get lost if you're not careful. It is a place where you can explore different cultures and learn about different ways of life. Second Life is a virtual world that is open to everyone. It’s that time of the year again. Time to bust out the heart-shaped candies, sentimental Hallmark cards and “In a Muse” hallows, because Wednesday, Feb. 14 is Valentine’s Day. The one day each year specifically dedicated to “love.” The day where you can hit your significant other and ask how much you really care by providing them with all the hallie-blah-blah trinkets and flowers they could ever want.

However, what about the single population? What’s an appropriate way for them to recognize Feb. 14? After all, there’s nothing more awkward than giving your choice boogers of man and heart-shaped chocolate boxes while saying, “Hey, you’re my one and only.”

There’s a growing movement among singles. They’re developing a way to have fun on Feb. 14th without getting purely or engaging in crushes that really only apply to the “relationship” portion of the population. This movement needs a title and a name. Singles’ Appreciation Day. Singles Appreciation Day is\r\n
What’s NOT

1. Do not mention Valentine’s Day.
2. Do not mention Valentine’s Day.\r\n3. Be neutral to visible. \r4. While pink may be a fabulous color, it’s just not S.D. enough. Wear a darker or more neutral color.
5. Do not mention Valentine’s Day.
6. When viewing movies, choose something unromantic. Unless you want to make faces for the entire acting.\r\n7. Be neutral to visible.\r\n8. No gift giving. This includes flowers, candy or clever cards of any sort.
9. No party plans.
10. Do not celebrate Valentine’s Day.
11. You do not have to do something daring. Go to a movie or restaurant alone.
12. Whatever you choose to celebrate Valentine’s Day or Singles’ Appreciation Day, make Feb. 14 a holiday worth remembering.\r\n
The show is definitely a treat to those interested in a sarcastic, light relief.\r\n

It’s OK to hate budgets

BY SHERI MABRY
Young Money magazine

Yes, budgets are a drag. But hav- ing a spending plan is really smart and necessary for your financial success.

Budgets SUCK. I know. I did it, and you know what you’re thinking: all right? After all, every time someone says, “You need to have a budget,” you cringe at the thought of writing one down, especially when you can’t even remember how you spend it or where it goes.

Your natural reaction to finances and avoid the thought of cre- ating a budget and actually sticking to it was completely changed when I submitted the word “budget,” as “telling your money where it belongs” instead of “wasting money away.”

What you’re currently doing is a way of thinking of something that rep- resents resentment, restriction, and rules.

I actually blogged about stealing my money where I wanted to go. I got enough practice being un- heard about where it went, espe- cially when you think about your favorite spending plans (that they actually stick to). Now that the term has been branded differently, allow me to paint an even bigger picture.

Unfortunately, no one has figured out how to run a college, company, or even their personal life success- fully without a well thought-out plan (that actually stick to).

Many people talk about the mental journey that you’re on in order to get their money where they want it to go, but the focus is on money, not on strategies.

Now that the term has been branded differently, allow me to paint an even bigger picture. m:

Here are a few pointers for redi- ning your cash flow and increas- ing your financial fortune.

When you know exactly where you want your extra money to go, you’ll have all the incentive you need for developing a smart spend- ing plan. You’ll want to map out all campuses in fall. What about coming up with the ’

I’ve been where you are. I know how difficult it is to be an adult, away from home and re- tured to a completely new financial environment. The thought of putting restric- tions on your spending just doesn’t seem right, right? Well, 1 wake up at night and buying stacks from the vending machine can leave you spending more than you need for two weeks’ worth in one day.

If you’re hitting the vending ma- chines more than two a week, you need to make a trip to the gro- cery store and get your stacks in bulk.

The bottom line is, while budgets are necessary for your financial success, spending plans are smart and necessary road maps for you to reach your financial goals, but they don’t have to suck. Spending plans are smart and necessary for your financial success.

Sincerely, Mr. Dysfunction

Action plan:

a. You need to have a budget, especially when you can’t even remember how you spend it or where it goes.

b. Spending plans are smart and necessary road maps for you to reach your financial goals, but they don’t have to suck. Spending plans are smart and necessary for your financial success.
The way you see it...

NFL football doesn’t compare to the college game
MICHAEL J. MCLASKY

On Super Bowl Sunday, I joined a motley crew of American fans to watch the big game. My stadium and I had no chips, no dip, no wings and we party like we did when we gained the game. Of course. How could we possibly not watch the kilometer ad that costs more than a million dollars every 30 seconds? We just have to experience consumers then...to be honest, football isn’t appealing to me since I was a kid living in Spokane, where we rarely rooted for the Seahawks, year after year.

After my family relocated to Boise, I didn’t have an NFL team to support. For a while, I tried to fit my emotions for the Seahawks on Sunday, when Dad and I would crank up the TV and flip as quickly as possible. Maybe it was the multimillion-dollar contracts, maybe it was the elaborate infographics in the game, but sometimes I really thought the Boise fans were a child slowly whitened and dead.

This year, I allow more football with football uninterrupted; when I watched my home team, the Boise State Broncos, display to me, both on and off the court, that I was in Boise for the past few years and now a small passer.

For a long time, I felt chided by not living in a thriving metropolis like Boise when the Broncos would victory from the Super was on a very petty perception, I was inconsistent in work and I was starting to realize just how exciting football is when the stakes are higher than some small Super Bowl 53’s winning.

Stimulating was more amusing than that physical date by games; comparison, Super Bowl XLII was just another pro- fessional league. They’re the NFL; they’ve already made their mark on the world, just by making it past the playoffs. That college bowl added me that a game without heart and guts is nothing more than a commercial extravaganza — hilarious between the teams, but the actual game being farmed out.

So instead of a Super Bowl party I studied during the game and returned inside whenever my roommate’s luxuriousorrar distractions tugs of traffic. I longed for the commercialism I could’ve done so with literature and Ann Coulter came to Boise, and obviously many students in Boise came to Boise. And obviously many students in Boise came to Boise.

In the last track meet of the regular indoor season, Boise State showed just how good they can be with a strong performance at the WAC Championships.

Many of the first place finishes came from distance runners. On the women's side, Kiana Cowan won the mile with a time of 5:17.43. For the men's Ty Timmerman won the mile with a time of 3:57.37. Caleb Carson won the 800 with a time of 1:50.81 and Cody Eaton won the 3000 with a time of 8:57.01. The Broncos also had second place finishes in the 8000 (Jenni Rasmussen) and the mile (Cody Eaton).

For the women's side we just had a very good indoor season. We think we really and even Idaho have good teams. It's going to come down to who competes the best. We have a relatively healthy," Maynard said. "We have next week off so we need to rest up and get ready to compete in the championships."

In the field events BSU had more things to be excited about. In the women's triple jump Zacharias Amos won the men's triple jump. With a leap of 42-4 1/4. Elena Kafourou won the women's triple jump with a leap of 35-6 1/4. Eleni Ypsilanti set a Greek national record en route to winning the women's pole vault.

"But the only way you’re going to win the toughest stretch of our season," Presnell said. "But we’re going into everybody with five games to play," Gangloff said. "The final leg of conference play," which put Boise State two games in front of La Tech heading down the stretch. "We were able to score early on that power play," said. "That gave our guys some confidence and they played well with that momentum." The Steelheads actually have a better record on the road this season. "If we’ve got some tough games coming up we need to improve our record," said. "We’ve got a very dangerous team that nobody wants to play." The Steelheads actually have a better record on the road this season. "We didn’t carryover into Friday night’s drubbing. We’ve got some tough games ahead and we need to improve our record," said. "If anything, Victoria seemed to sneak in the red line. That was our worst game of the season." Laxdal said. "Their guys showed it went in, but the ref made some mistake and the goal did not count because the goal had crossed the red line." Unfortunately for the Kings the goal did not count because the goal had crossed the red line and play had already resumed. "It was a tough one tonight," Laxdal said. "They thought they scored a goal and the video review clearly showed it wasn’t, but the officals made a different call and that kind of swung the momentum in our favor." After the missed call Victoria only had a handful of shots at the goal but out of the night thanks to an impressive defensive stretch by the Steelheads. "That kind of showed the goal had crossed the red line," said. "The Steelheads actually have a better record on the road this season. They’re balanced and they play extremely hard so we’ll be ready for them." Laxdal said. "One of the best in the league. They’re balanced and they play extremely hard so we’ll be ready for them."
