several individual tournaments this year. The organization lacks. the funding to further compete at this level. Funding requests have been repeatedly denied by the BSU administration.

One of the marks of threatened at the 2007 National Forensic Tournament, eight top-10 national finishes, six national All-American honors, more than 30 team championships at individual tournaments and a national title in 2005, Boise State's Intercollegiate debate and speech team, the Talkin' Broncos, is not gaining any respect from university officials.

Forensics, Marty Most, informed Communication Chair, Rick Moore, that he could no longer serve as the DOF. This decision was partly due to inadequate and diminishing funding for the Talkin' Bronco's travel and scholarship budget.

"To my understanding, Marty resigned because resources are increasingly inadequate to fund the program at a level commensurate with the first-class program the university often uses as evidence of Boise State's academic excellence," Moore said. He has served as the DOF for 19 years.

Increases in fuel prices, hotel costs and restrictions on overnight travel have severely impacted the forensic budget. Their current budget has virtually remained the same + since 1999, the only change being a cut of almost $1,000.

"That decrease, and inflation, have eroded the value of the budget by over $8,000 in constant dollars," Most said.

In February 2006, the Talkin' Broncos appealed to the Executive Budget Committee at the Student Fee Proposal Hearings for additional funding. That appeal was ultimately denied, forcing the forensic team, the College of Social Sciences and Public Affairs and the Provost Office to temporarily supplement their budget through special appropriations and fundraising.

Sona Andrews, Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs, said the Executive Budget Committee did not approve the requested funds ecause they wanted to stay consistent with the financing of similar clubs that also travel to compete. She said although the request was denied, the university has made the commitments necessary to provide long-term supplemental financing for the forensic team but has not moved this money into their permanent budget.

Despite the current fundraising and temporary appropriations, Most said the deficiency of funding for the Talkin' Broncos jeopardizes its international reputation, quality and competition of the program. Financial constraints have required the team to cut back on individual competitions and have prevented many other students from partici-. pating in forensics.

Over the past four years, the Forensics Program has reduced its number of tournaments and its number of students.

"The only way to restrict spending is to reduce team size and scheduled competition," Most said. "That would effectively end the program's ability to compete at a national and perhaps even a regional level."

These individual tournaments are important because they prepare students to compete at the national level. Most said cutting even more tournaments would just set students up for failure.

"Had the College of SSPA not provided supplemental funding in 2005-06, the number of tournaments attended would have fallen below the minimum for Division I institutions, requiring the Boise State program to drop from Division I to Division II status in the Northwest Forensic Conference," Most said.

Currently, the team meets the minimum requirements for participation at the Division I level. While it is unlikely that the NFC would force Boise State to return to Division II, Most said it would soon be impossible to compete successfully at the Division I level without a meaningful increase in permanent funding.

He also said that without a permanent budget increase it would be difficult to schedule future competitions and recruit potential students, because relying on temporary funds will not guarantee that the money will be there in the future.

"I think there are two possibilities; either the administration doesn't believe me, or they don't care, and neither of these is a ringing endorsement," Most said.

The Communication Department is currently searching for a new program director.

The forensic program has represented the academic excellence of BSU for over 70 years. In 1971 they joined the Pi Kappa Delta organization, the oldest national collegiate forensic organization in the U.S. Boise State has had eight top-10 finishes at the national tournament since becoming a Pi Kappa Delta member institution. In addition to this year's runner-up finish, the Talkin' Broncos placed tenth in 1975, sixth in 1993, third in 1995, fourth in 1999, fifth in 2001, third in 2003 and first in 2005.

The Pi Kappa Delta National Tournament is the oldest collegiate debate and speech tournament in existence.

Held every two years since 1917, it is the largest comprehensive forensics tournament held in the United States.

Student-led boards seek inspired applicants

BY JOSLYN SALOW News Writer

The Boise State University Student Programs Board and Volunteer Services Boards are hiring for all positions for the 2007-2008 academic year. SPB is funded by student fees and coordinates events on campus for students. VSB is a student-led organization dedicated to providing accessible volunteer opportunities.

Jill Krenecki, currently assistant director of membership for SPB, has worked with SPB for a year and was a volunteer for a year before that.

Her job is multi-dimensional, requires multi-tasking and is for someone who is motivated by the job.

Krenecki says that her job entails gathering volunteers to meet and discuss their ideas about what to spend money on, what events to bring to BSU, obtaining help for the events, and what ideas from the board they like and dislike. She also works with housing and other organizations on campus to get students involved with SPB.

"I would recommend that people volunteer, see what it is all about and scope it out. But vou don't have to be. Most of our board this year had never been involved in SPB at all and they have done awesome," Krenecki said.

She recommends that a student be openminded in this position.

"Somebody that is willing to get out there and talk to people they don't know, recruit people and try to hear what other students are all about and not just be stuck in their own opinion about what needs to happen on campus. I have to take a lot of different peoples' opinions and bring it back to the executive board and tell them basically the gist of what people want," Krenecki said.

She said that it is a crazy but fun work environment.

"It's great, it is a lot of fun. It is very high energy. You have 10 people in here at one time all listening to different music, and all listening to different DVDs," Krenecki said.

Blair Davison, currently an outreach coordinator for VSB, recommends that an applicant for her job have a strong interest in volunteering and a motivation to obtain volunteers.

Her job entails marketing and promoting the VSB events and spreading the word about them to the campus and community. She tries to find volunteers for the events by setting up marketing booths in the Student Union Building, handing out flyers, giving class presentations, and doing write-ups for Bronco Update.

"Somebody who is looking to be an outreach coordinator has to want to be involved themselves because if you are not interested in what we are doing then you are not going to have the motivation to get people interested themselves. I love volunteering and so I like to see other people who volunteer. I love to see motivated people. We have a few students who volunteer with us almost every event and they have just the same enthusiasm every time and I love seeing that," Davison said.

Maria Rollins, currently the director of VSB, is leaving her position. She says that there are many aspects of her job that are important.

"It is a very big responsibility to manage Volunteer Services, but it is a great experience at the same time. It can really enhance your resume ... it is a great time to network with the vice president of Boise State, the president, all of the student visitors - you have that kind of exposure," Rollins said.

SPB paid positions include director, assistant director of marketing, assistant director of membership; graphic designer and coordinators for special events, family events, concerts, films, lectures and annual events. All interested full-time students are invited to apply. Students are required to maintain a 2.25 cumulative GPA and work at least 15 hours per week. Applications are available now at the Student Union Information Desk and Student Activities desk.

The application deadline for the director position has passed. All other applications must be submitted by March 30.

VSB paid positions include director, assistant director and coordinators for outreach, environmental issues, healthcare issues, poverty issues and youth issues.

Job descriptions and applications are available at the Student Union Information Desk. The application deadline for the director position has passed. All other applications must be submitted by April 2.

For more information on SPB, call Carrie Miller at 426-4239. For information on VSB, call Mahl Takazawa at 426-2877.

U.S. citizen's detainment in Ethiopian prison leaves officials with questions

AU.S. citizen who was caught fleeing the recent fighting in Somalia was questioned about links to al-Qaida by the FBI in Kenya, then secretly sent back to the war-ravaged country, where he was turned over to Ethiopian forces.

Amir Mohamed Meshal, 24, is now imprisoned in Ethiopia, where the State Department's 2006 human rights report says "conditions in prisons and pre-trial detention centers remain very poor" and that "there were numerous credible reports that security officials often beat or mistreated detainees."

The fact that Meshal has landed in an Ethiopian prison without any semblance "of due process raises new questions about what role the rule of law plays in the Bush administration's war on terrorism. Other suspected terrorists or "enemy combatants" have been exposed to extreme interrogation methods, secretly sent to countries that practice torture, held for extended periods without charges or lawyers, or put under surveillance without court warrants.

An American official who met Meshal in Kenya but wasn't authorized to discuss his case publicly told McClatchy Newspapers that the U.S. Embassy asked Kenya to release Meshal so he could return to the United States. There are no outstanding charges against Meshal, and U.S. law enforcement officials weren't planning to take him into custody, the official said.

"The Kenyan authorities decided otherwise. It's not something we have control over," the official said. State Department spokesman Tom Casey said the U.S. has protested Meshal's deportation. Human rights groups in Kenya and the United States, however, disputed the contention that the U.S. was powerless to win Meshal's release from Kenyan custody before di tre Volo

Las Polar A Star

he was deported.

"Anyone who tells you that the United States doesn't have the clout to convince the Kenyans to return an American citizen is either misinformed or lying," said John Sifton, of Human Rights Watch in New York.

Kenya and Ethiopia are key allies in the Bush administration's battle against Islamic extremism in Africa, and President Bush has requested a total of more than $1 billion in aid for the two countries in fiscal 2008, making them among the largest recipients of U.S. aid in Africa.

A spokesman for the Kenyan government didn't have any immediate comment.

Meshal's treatment contrasts sharply with that of four British citizens who were caught fleeing the fighting, and of Daniel Joseph Maldonado, another U.S. citizen who fled Somalia and was arrested for entering Kenya illegally.

The four Britons were turned over to British officials, sent home and freed after they were questioned. U.S. authorities obtained custody of Maldonado and his two children from Kenya, flew them back to the United States and charged him in Texas with undergoing military and bomb-making training with al-Qaida in Somalia.

The difference, said two other U.S. officials who are familiar with the case but also weren't authorized to discuss it publicly, is that Maldonado quickly confessed to involvement with al-Qaida and Meshal didn't. So while Maldonado could be brought home and imprisoned until his trial, one of the officials said, there wasn't sufficient evidence to charge Meshal and keep him in jail in the United States.

Two U.S. officials in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Meshal was turned over to Ethiopian forces in Somalia and is being held in the Ethiopian capital, Addis Ababa.

FBI agents began visiting him regularly last week, one of the officials said.

"We have only recently learned that Mr. Meshal is now in detention in Addis Ababa and will be seeking consular access to him," said State Department spokesman Casey.

The Ethiopian Embassy in Washington didn't respond to a request for comment.

California game poachers run wild, officals pursue

When the Animal Planet TV net-

Amanda Feldon, the Londonbased producer and director of the Animal Planet program, was so alarmed that she sent a blistering letter to Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger in January.

"I am particularly shocked to know that this is tolerated in the State of California," Feldon wrote, "and I am sure it will cause great consternation when the programme is eventually watched by a world-wide audience."

The program is expected to air in September as part of a series called "Crime Scene Wild."

Contacted last week, Feldon emphasized the letter expressed only her personal opinion. She had not yet received a response from the Governor's Office.

"All this happened in such a short period of time, and I cannot imagine the carnage that occurs during a longer period," Feldon said via e-mail. "If the wardens who patrol and protect the wildlife here are prevented from doing their job by low pay or manpower ... there will be no wildlife in California."

Sandy Cooney, spokesman for the State Resources Agency, which oversees Fish and Game, said the Governor's Office is working on a response to Feldon's letter.

"Clearly this is an issue that we are very concerned about, and we are doing everything we can in working with the Legislature to create better [pay] parity for game wardens," Cooney said.

Feldon's excursion had the full blessing and cooperation of Fish and Game administrators. The wardens involved said two of the illegal bear kills led to arrests and convictions. A third, involving the bear cub, remains under investigation - partly because wardens lack the right DNA matching technology.

"California leads the world on a lot of things, so it's amazing this is even happening to us," said Jerry Karnow, a game warden in Nevada County.

The shortage of game wardens began in 2000, when the dot-com bust led to a state budget crisis that included slashing about 100 game warden jobs.

Attrition has led to many more vacancies, largely because wardens are underpaid compared with other law-enforcement agencies, said Capt. Dennis Deanda, a 20-year veteran of the department and president of the California Fish and Game Warden Managers and Supervisors Association.

Starting wardens earn about $3,570 per month, compared with $6,000 for a California Highway Patrol officer, though they have similar training and police powers - and both face dangers in the field. so critical that they have pledged $300,000 to launch the California Game Wardens Foundation. Modeled after a similar CHP charity, it aims to raise $2 million this year to provide financial assistance to wardens, from rent payments to equipment purchases to college tuition aid for their children.

The foundation can be contacted at www.thegwf.org.

"I think the warden work force is generally underappreciated," said co-founder Ned Spieker, a Bay Area real estate investor. "We have a lot of laws on the books that protect California's natural resources. But unless we have skilled and highly motivated people to enforce those laws, the laws will do no good."

WHAT THE?

Something must be done, officer! Wait who was that?

Auburn, Wa., residents complained bitterly to police that motorists were speeding through their quiet neighborhood.

The neighbors feared that this created an unsafe condition for those who lived there.

Police set up an automated de-work set out to film an episode on bear poaching, producers assumed their most horrifying images would come from remote and unregulated corners of Southeast Asia.

They never imagined some of the worst cases would be found in California.

But after spending a day and a half in October with California Department of Fish and Game wardens, the crew had film of three black bears illegally killed in the mountains of Plumas and Nevada counties. The crimes included a 3month-old bear cub shot through the head while trying to escape poachers who had just killed its mother.

It was further evidence of a drastic game warden shortage in the Golden State that has become the subject of growing concern among the public and in the state Legislature. With only about 190 field wardens on the job for the entire state of California, vast areas of the state remain unprotected from poachers.

The department has about 75 vacancies because it can't attract enough qualified candidates.

The state's new budget gave wardens a 15 percent pay raise effective Jan. 1. But CHP officers got a 10 percent raise, so the disparity remains.

"We've had a little success, but nowhere near what we need in order to start to address this very serious problem," said state Sen. Dave Cogdill, R-Mødesto. "And it's one that's becoming more serious by the day."

Cogdill is/a co-sponsor, along with Sen/Pat Wiggins, D-Santa Rosa, of a bill requiring pay parity for wardens. The measure, SB 695, aims to bring wardens' salaries within five percent of CHP pay.

"There really isn't any justification for us to be paid any less," Deanda said. "This bill is extremely important to wardens and the future of wardens in the state of California."

A trio of wealthy investors thinks protecting California's wildlife is vice to catch the offenders. Of the 24 violators who were nabbed, 21 were residents of the neighborhood.

Maybe some dinner and dancing, then who knows?

After their relationship ended badly, a Virginia man made numerous copies of a DVD of his exgirlfriend engaged in sexual relations with him, then put them on windshields of the cars parked in her neighborhood along with her name, address and phone number.

She found out about it after a number of men called or showed up at her door to ask her to go out with them.

The way we see it ...

Boise is light years behind in public transit opportunities

You don't know his name. He is grungy and has hinting smells like alcohol and waste. He looks utterly exhausted. But for 15 minutes he gets a free ride to the other side of town, because he needs it.

Two college students run to the street corner on Roosevelt and Overland to catch the 29 to Boise State. Coming up on the corner they see the Valley Ride fly by, three seconds late. The real trouble isn't just that they missed the bus, but since it's mid-day, they have to wait an hour before the next one comes their way. So they walk. She doesn't want to walk 23 blocks in her heels; he has a bum knee and the hills are heavy.

Starting to get the point?

The City of Boise doesn't seem to get it. The city bus system in Boise is ridiculous. The buses come every half hour during the morning and afternoon, once per hour during the middle of the day and they stop running altogether around 7 p.m.

The bus is a free ride for students, but it is nowhere near compatible to the needs of this mediocre metropolis. It isn't free to the average Joe or the fourth-grade kid who lives 10 miles from school. It isn't expensive, by any means, but dollars add up and to people who have trouble keeping dollars, those few mean very much.

There is no question that the air quality in Boise is better than in most cities, but if we are so worried about the numbers of parts per millions of CO2 floating on this valley air, why don't we do something about it?

There is no train system in Boise. Why not? Is it merely the millions of dollars which keep a train connecting Boise-Eagle-Meridian-Nampa-Caldwell from being built? It is needed now. The freeways are dangerous and dreadfully slow at rush hour afternoons out of Boise. If there were a train it would take thousands of cars off the road every day. That would make life not only easier, but more timely and efficient for Treasure Valley residents and the working-class citizens of this city.

Modern cities like Porltand, Ore. are light years ahead of Boise in the idea of "Green" transportation. Portland has a train, free to everyone downtown, trolleys running perpendicular to the train and buses filling in all the gaps. The result? The thriving downtown area of Portland is clean and filled to the brim with people on foot or on transit vessels. There are hardly any cars at all, jamming the streets and fighting for parking places. It would take Boise 30 years to catch up to the advances in Portland, so why not get started? Start by expanding the bus schedules. Get more routes and bring them by more frequently. Advertise. If the bus system gets better, more people will use it.

-I'm bringing sexy back-

BY SHANNON MORGAN Opinion Writer

"Oh my God! We were like, totally making out at The Bistro! Those guys were buying us sooo many drinks! Like, we are so hot!"

I overheard Girlfriend A say to Girlfriend B in the restroom at The Bistro as I was standing in line behind them, waiting for the gaggle of girlfriends to finish applying their 50 layers of makeup so I could get to the sink to wash my hands.

It seems these types of women travel in herds. They can't go into the restroom alone, I mean really, what if one of them forgot their pink sparkle lip gloss at home (you know, the kind Paris Hilton wears) and had a small crisis on her hands!?

I'm sorry ladies, I know what it's like to want to gain attention from a man, but getting trashed and making out with your best friend in order to get that attention is taking the completely wrong approach.

Yes, you'll get free drinks (lots and lots of free drinks) and you may even take one of these guys home with you.

He's only going to hang around long enough for you to "get low" like the women in the P. Diddy video, then he'll leave skid marks so deep on your bedroom floor, you'll have the shame of it to keep you company for weeks to come.

Trust me that guy doesn't find you sexy, his penis certainly does, but in the end, he's not looking at you with much more than his penis.

I see the same thing played out at bars over and over again when I go downtown on the weekends.

When did the idea of making out with other girls and getting free drinks from strange men become how we define our sexiness and self-worth?

I'd like to propose a new definition of a sexy woman and hope that mine makes a little more sense than Girlfriend A and B's.

First, a sexy woman doesn't have to get trashed to feel sexy. It comes from within. A sexy woman knows her own worth and knows that the right guy will find that irresistible.

A sexy woman doesn't accept free drinks from guys; she does however accept one from a gentleman. Heck, if she's feeling saucy, she'll offer to buy him a drink. I know that sounds crazy, but trust me nothing is sexier to a man than a confident woman who isn't afraid to treat him for a change.

A sexy woman does not define herself by her purse, her shoes or the perfect arch of her fake eyelashes. She may (and probably does) own all of those things but realizes they're just ornaments that accentuate an already brilliant jewel. This type of woman is just as sexy in sweat pants as she is with her Louis Vuitton handbag.

A sexy woman can stop a man dead in his tracks with just one look. In that look she communicates to him, "I'm confident, I'm intelligent, and you're damn right I look good in these jeans!"

After a man notices this type of woman he says, "Wow, this is going to be one exciting and worthy challenge."

That's what's missing ladies, the challenge, the mystery, the soft femininity our grandmothers had back when women understood seduction.

Being sexy is not about being sexual or sensual, it's about harnessing that radiant inner fire every woman possesses and letting that be the magnet that leaves the man candy swooning.

It's not only about the ornaments on the outside, but the ones on the inside that are uniquely yours.

Being sexy is a state of mind, it's not a state of body and you won't find it at the bottom of a shot glass.

If all else fails, at worse you'll be back ramming your tongue down Girlfriend B's throat, taking up precious free space in the ladies restroom at bars and puking in the alley behind The Bistro because you've had too many free drinks from hot guys who only care to see how many licks it takes to get to the center of your lollypop.

Will the real Hans Blix please step forward?

BY CLAUDIO BEAGARIE Opinion Writer

Hans Blix blew his liberal cover, March 14 in front of a packed house at the Morrison Center when he evaded a very pointed question posed by Sandra Pederson of the Snake River Alliance.

Pederson asked Blix what chemical products the new Global Nuclear Energy Partnership recycling reactor proposed for eastern Idaho might produce, the risk factor associated with these products and if he would live in this area. GNEP is a Bush administration plan to control the worldwide use and storage of nuclear materials. As envisioned, Idaho would be a recycling and nuclear waste storage site. Instead of answering her question he chose to discuss the merits and functions of GNEP.

At this point my estimation of this man plummeted and I thought to myself, how could such a respected world figure show so little respect for a citizen with such a poignant question?

I may be a senior citizen finally drawing my SSI payments, but as long as I have lived, Hans Blix was a sharp reminder that there is always something new around the next bend.

Before sitting in at this lecture my impression of the man was the image of a disgruntled chief weapons inspector who failed to stop the tragedy that defines the United States military effort in Iraq.

For that role he played he had my respect, even though I am sure he was being used by the Bush administration to clear Iraq of weapons of mass destruction so as to make the area safe for U.S. troops. He held that predominantly anti-war crowd in the palm of his hand throughout the 90 minutes of lecture time but at the end he showed his true colors. From now on I will forever associate Blix with the wanton proliferation of nuclear technology in spite of public safety concerns.

Apparently Hans Blix has spent much of the last 26 years working to further the interests of the global nuclear industry, which he painted as a safe alternative to pollution belching fossil-fuel-fired energy plants.

According to the Distinguished Lecture Series brochure, Blix is the former director of the International Atomic Energy Agency where his main role was the promotion of "safe, secure and peaceful nuclear technologies."

Hans Blix handed us a neat one, a liberal conservative alliance to turn Idaho into a repository for the world's nuke waste and home to a nuke industry whose risks remain unknown at this point.

Blix did not even touch on the dangers associated with Idaho's geographic area. The INL sits in an active fault region where earthquakes can reach intensities of 7.0 on the Richter scale.

Was Hans Blix even aware of this when he touted the benefits of GNEP to the Morrison Center audience last Monday?

I believe the people of Idaho should be aware of all risk factors associated with this proposed project and that the earthquake risk factor be taken very seriously. The people of Idaho must have the last word on the proposed Global Nuclear Energy project.

Public fear of nukes for neighbors could restrain economic growth and development in our state, do not let this happen.

If it's dependable, so will be the riders.

Now, I'm all for informative, intelligent events that bring to light a clearly endemic problem in our country but what follows is disgusting.

Below the picture of Vasquez are the words, "Win a dinner for two at Chapala's Mexican restaurant! Climb through the hole in the fence and enter false ID documents into the food stamp drawing!"

Offensive doesn't even begin to describe these statements.

I spoke with out-going ASBSU Sen. Jennifer Stolley about the ad. She was combative and seemed offended that I took issue with the event.

She, of course, said something to the effect of not wanting those people to come into her country and taking American jobs.

It is one thing to educate those about the problem of illegal immigration in this country but it is quite another to demonize and ridicule the plight of others who seek a better life.

If not all illegal immigrants are from Mexico, why is a free dinner being offered at a Mexican restaurant?

Why didn't the College Republicans choose to co-organize the event with MECHA or OELA or another organization that can better inform us about illegal immigration?

Jonathan Sawmiller was granted a meeting with our university president in person as a result of him and his henchman complaining about liberal campus speakers.

Members of the Idaho Progressive Student Alliance, during the whole Taco Bell Arena fiasco, also attempted to meet with Kustra.

Kustra never met with any member of the IPSA.

These events should call into question the integrity of certain members of the Boise State College Republicans, and the agenda of our university president.

The event is set for March 22, 7:30 p.m. in the Jordan Ballroom.

For sensationalism's sake, the College Republicans have sunk themselves so low as to deliberately ridicule the struggles of illegal immigrants, and have once again drawn battle lines rather than work toward a mutual understanding of all the sides of this debate.

WHAT'S HOT WHAT'S NOT IN ENTERTAINMENT

Summer sequels are on the way Summer is the best time of the year by far - no school and no extra responsibilities. Also, summer is the season when large amounts of sequels head to the box office.

'Spider-Man Three" starts things off, opening May 4, followed closely by the films, "Shrek the Third," "Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End," "Ocean's Thirteen," "Fantastic Four: Rise of the Silver Surfer," and "Rush Hour Three."

Talk about an exciting season for the big screen, which doesn't even fully express the excitement surround the opening of "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," which plans to open on July 20.

It's beginning to look like an amazing summer.

'In the Sawtooths' heads to D.C.

BY MAT LA RUE Culture Writer

The Kennedy Center American College Theatre Festival has invited Boise State's Theatre Arts Department to perform their fall production of "In the Sawtooths" on April 21 and April 22 at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C.

Roger L. Stevens, the Kennedy Center's founding chairman, started this national festival in 1969. The KCACTF is dedicated to promoting, encouraging, recognizing and celebrating the finest and most diverse production in university and college theatre programs. To date, the KCACTF involves more than 18,000 students from more than 600 academic institutions throughout the country, This year the Boise State Theatre Arts Department has been chosen to perform their production of "In The Sawtooths," one of only four full-length productions chosen nationally for this prestigious event.

To be invited to KCACTF's national conference, theatre programs must first be invited to a regional festival. On Saturday December 9, 2006 the Region VII Selection Committee defermined that the following plays were to be invited: "Getting Out" by Marsha Norman, University of Portland, "Life & Limb" by Keith Reddin, Albertson College of Idaho, "In the Sawtooths" by Student Playwright Dano Madden, Boise State University and "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by William Shakespeare, University of Oregon.

From here, KCACTF's National Selection Committee decides which performances are to be invited to the national festival. other full-length produc tions alongside Boise State at the national festival are as follows: "Nocturne" byAdamRapp, College of Wooster, "Waiting for Godot" by Samuel Beckett, Albright College and "The Diviners" by Jim Leonard, California State of the play with the theatre arts department to prepare for the performance at the festival. Madden has already been determined as the winner of the National Student Playwriting Award, one of the highest honors at the KCACTF and will be awarded at the festival. Madden, while attending Boise State in 1997, was also awarded co-winner of the National Short Play Award for his play "Drop."

Madden developed his work on "In the Sawtooths" at the Seven Devils Playwright Conference in McCall. Seven Devils is a group dedicated to supporting new American plays and playwrights. At this conference playwrights are invited to spend two weeks writing, rewriting and rehearsing their plays.

Richard Klautsch, Chair of the Department of Theatre Arts, discovered through a pamphlet that Madden's play "In the Sawtooths" was being work-shopped and rehearsed at this conference. Klautsch contacted Madden in curiosity about the play and was sent a script: As you can tell the results have been outstanding.

The production designers include both Boise State theatre arts faculty and students. Professor-Ann Hoste designed the costumes and professor Genny Wynn, der., signed the lighting. Theatre Arts major Erin Haight designed the scenery and music major Kristie Williams designed the sound.

The play itself is a two-act production with a cast of only three actors. Directed by Mike Baltzell, a theatre arts professor, the cast consists of Loren Jones, Kyle Barrow and Dylan Hughes. The play depicts three close friends in their mid to late twenties who go hiking together and a tragic event befalls them.

This play has

Latin American Film Festival brings history and intrigue to Boise State University

BY CHARITY VARNER Culture Writer

The Latin American Film Festival came to Boise State Wednesday, March 14 and showcased the movie "Garage Olimpo."

The Latin American Film Festival is an annual event intended to allow the students of Boise State University the opportunity to become enriched in the vibrancy of various aspects within the Latin cultures. Students of Latin descent can identify with as well as learn more about their own heritage through the festival.

"Garage Olimpo" is a dark, political drama dealing with the military dictatorship in Argentina during the late 1970s and early 1980s.

In 1976, the Argentine armed forces overthrew the government and took control of the country. General Jorge Rafael Videla came to power and embarked on a ruthless campaign against anyone who seemed to oppose the views of the military in any way.

The forces of General Videla kidnapped "suspects" who were mysteriously never seen or heard from again. There were an estimated 11,000 disappearances within Argentina.

Prisons overflowed, torture was common and trials were nonexistent.

These horrible acts against basic human rights raged throughout the land from 1976 to 1982 in what came to be known as the "dirty war."

The world around Argentina began to take notice and the atrocities of the "dirty war" began to cease in response to the pressure induced specifically from the United States when President James E. Carter Jr. refused to keep sending military aid to Argentina.

"Garage Olimpo" tells the story of the "dirty war" from the perspective of the people who were forced to disappear. The movie was viewed in the Lookout Room located upstairs in emitted from the film. Everything the Student Union Building with a small audience of mostly Spanishspeaking students.

But there seemed to be a major problem. The movie was in Spanish with no English subtitles. This made it hard for non-Spanish speaking viewers. This alienates viewers who don't know te language.

Dear Fornication Forum,

I'm a clean freak. My house is spotless, my car, everything - in-. cluding my body. I hate body hair, so I shave everything. However, my boyfriend doesn't groom his areas and it repulses me in bed. What can I do to persuade him to clean up his act? Are there benefits, especially healthy ones, to having a shaved pubic region? Ms. Clean Freak

А

Dear Ms. Clean Freak, Good for you for being so clean. People really overlook cleanliness. Though hygeine is very important, don't go overboard on your own body hair - it's normal and natural. If your boyfriend doesn't groom himself or practice good hygeine, I would gently suggest that he develop better self-care habits. Remind him he is an adult and that part of being an adult means taking care of your body and who you are. If cleanliness is important to you and if he is making you uncomfortable, let him know that he is making you feel awkward and ask him to please shower before bed. Let him know that showering would make you feel better about that part of your relationship. That's not too much to ask, especially if his lack of hygeine can and may make you sick. If you want to suggest that he shave, there are not any real benefits, nor are there any devastating medical problems associated with shaving of the pubic area. After all, athletes (like swimmers) have been known to shave all of their body hair to reduce resistance in the water. Shaving pubic hair is not uncommon.

There is a new razor on the market - the Protector, made by Schick, that can be bought for under $10. The disadvantage to shaving is ingrown hairs, razor burn, potential cuts, infection, itchiness and prickliness when the hair begins to grow back. Other options for getting rid of pubic hair are:

Waxing. Waxing costs $20-$60 depending on your salon. The disadvantages of waxing are infection, tearing of skin and it only lasts a few weeks.

Hair removal creams. Creams cost anywhere from $6 - $30 per bottle/tube. The disadvantage of a cream is skin irritaion or burning and creams also only get rid of hair for a few weeks.

Electrolysis: Electrolysis is said to be a permanent form of hair removal. Electrolysis can cost from $25 - $100 per treatment and multiple treatments are needed. Electrolysis is done by using a needle and administering a low electrical current into the hair follicle; the electric current kills the hair in the hair shaft. The disadvantage to electrolysis is that it takes a long time since you have to put the needle on almost every hair follicle. Electrolysis will cause reddening and irritation that goes away within a few hours, or a day or two after treatment.

ORUM

Laser hair removal. Laser is probably the better form of permanent hair removal. Laser, like electrolysis, is done in a series and costs anywhere from $50 to start with, depending upon the clinic. Laser should be done by a dermatologist or liscensed professional. Laser may cause reddening of the skin, irritation that goes away a few hours or a day after treatment and in worst case scenarios may cause minor burns. But that also goes away a few days after treatment. Talk to your boyfriend honestly and openly and let him know that good hygeine is important in maintaining a healthy relationship.

BSU move game against Southern Mississippi

ESPN announced March 14 that Boise State University's home football game against Southern Mississippi has been moved to Sept. 27 (Thursday) and will be nationally broadcast on ESPN.

The game between the Broncos and Golden Eagles, which was originally scheduled for Sept. 22 (Saturday), will kick off at 5:30 p.m. (MT) in Bronco Stadium. The move to Thursday means at least five Bronco football games will-be broadcast by the ESPN network this upcoming season.

Bronco home games against New Mexico State University Oct. 7 (Sunday) and the University of Nevada Oct. 14 (Sunday), and away games at Fresno State Oct. 26 (Friday) and Hawaii Nov. 23 (Friday), are also scheduled to be broadcast by the national cable system. Times and cable channels will be announced at a later date.

In sports you will occasionally run into a team that outplays you on that given day. Regardless, of how talented you are, from time to time you get a good, old-fashioned butt-whooping.

Much to the chagrin of the Boise State women's basketball team, that game for them happened to come at one of the most in-opportune times.

Boise State's NCAA tournament opening round game against No. 5 seed George Washington did not go as planned for the Broncos. Not even close, in fact. The women found themselves down 5-0 early. That five-point deficit turned into 10 and then 15.

The greatest reality show ever

BY JAKE GARCIN Sports Editor

I may have just experienced the most boring weekend of my life. I didn't have much homework and since I'm not Irish I was forced to sit home Saturday night and receive drunken phone calls from all the people privileged enough to celebrate St. Patrick's Day. The worst part, however, was the fact that there was nothing worth watching on television.

Ok, so I lied a little bit. I did go out for St. Patty's Day and I found an interesting reality show on television that must have been running a marathon because it was on all weekend long. It was called NCAA March Madness - the men's basketball tournament, I think. I didn't pick up the entire history of the show in just four days of watching, but I certainly picked up that the basic theme is drama.

Some kids named Xavier had the supposed best team in the country on the ropes Saturday morning, up nine over Ohio State with three minutes left in the game. The big, bad Buckeyes must have some immunity points saved up, however, because they pulled off a comeback that appeared nearly impossible and left me screaming like a pre-pubescent boy.

Earlier in the weekend I found myself wrapped up in some drama between the University of Nevada-Reno and Creighton. Some kid named Fajitas, Flapjackus or Flemritas - I hadn't ever heard of him - led the Wolf Pack to an overtime win over the Jays. The most dramatic part of the whole game, however, was myself trying not to punch a hole in the wall of my girlfriend's house while I helped hang mail baskets - all while watching the game out of the corner of my

I find myself so absorbed by everything surrounding this March Madness thing I can't hardly live my regular life.

Even the drunks down at the bar were pulling their hair out as Duke lost to Virginia Commonwealth. And these are guys who probably flipped a coin for each game as they filled out their brackets. I am becoming a firm believer this tournament fad is the greatest college sports reality show going right now. I don't remember giving a second thought about missing the Wake Forest and Louisville football game in January. That was a BCS game. From what I have heard those BCS games are supposed to be a really big deal too. This may sound crazy, but I think these basketball guys have it figured out. I don't even care if the best team wins each year. It is so exciting - how can you be upset with any end result? My proposal is to use this March Madness thing as a basic model for all things in life. I think I'll recommend to my friends they should set up a March Madness dating system when finding their next girlfriend. Invite sixteen girls to compete in a loser-out dating tournament - although the loser may really win in this scenario. It could also be used in the work place, possibly as a system for determining promotions. Give everyone an equal opportunity to do certain tasks of work, with definitive ways to advance into later rounds by doing the best work. All the emotion might even cause a slap fight or two, if you're lucky. I'm thrilled the tournament will be on for another few weeks and I'll undoubtedly be sad when it's finally over. I hope it becomes popular enough they decide to have a season two. Unlike "Survivor," "American Idol" and "Big Brother," this reality show has real substance.

Boise State announced times for four of its home games. The Weber State University game, which opens the 2007 season, will start at 7 p.m. (MT) Aug. 30 (Thursday). Boise State's game against the University of Wyoming Sept. 15 (Saturday) will start at 6 p.m. (MT), while the San Jose State game Nov. 3 (Saturday) and the University of Idaho contest Nov. 17 (Saturday) are scheduled to start at 1 p.m. (MT).

Gymnastics team drops final road dual Despite posting its third-highest score of the season Friday, the Boise State University gymnastics team fell to Southern Utah University 195.175-192.750 at the Centrum.

The Broncos dropped to 6-11 this season and 1-6 in the Western Athletic Conference in what was Bronco Head Coach Sam Sandmire's last road dual of her career.

The Broncos did make two individual victories on the evening, highlighted by senior Tara Oberg's win on beam. Oberg posted a career-high 9.9 to record her first-ever title on the event.

Freshman DeAvera Todd captured her fifth vault title of the season with a 9.825.

Senior Kristin Aldrich finished second on two events, posting a 9.8 on vault and a 9.875 on beam.

The Broncos conclude their regular season March 23 in a dual meet against WAC foe Utah State.

More importantly, the meet will mark the final home meet of Sandmire's 20-year Bronco career. The dual meet will also be senior night, so come out and thank Sandmire and the Broncos' two seniors for their contributions to Boise State University.

Begay shines bright

Begay led all scorers in the more after the break.

She finished the game 8-of-14 from the field and 2-of-2 from the free throw line, Saturday's game was Begay's final one in a Boise State uniform. She finished her career a 33 percent three-point shooter, averaging 7.4 points per game.

Boise State senior guard Nadia Begay did all she could to help the Broncos attempt a comeback against George Begay was consistentdeep buzzer-beating three point ly hot all night long. She hit four shot to end the half. BSU trailed three's in the first half and four at halftime 44-25.

"They were very big and they are a very good team," Presnell said. "They have gone to the NCAA tournament 13 of the last 16 years. Their players are experienced and we just struggled at the beginning stretch of the game." George Washington's star player didn't have any troubles getting right into a groove in the first half. Six-foot, four-inch sophomore post Jessica Adair ended the first half already with a double-double.

The second half wasn't a whole lot different for the Broncos.

Begay ended her Boise State career on a nice note. She nailed a total of eight three pointers on the night, finishing with a gamehigh 26 points.

"She was great," Presnell said. "Nadia had a great one to finish her career off. She had eight threes, she shot the ball extremely well and she tried to keep us in it while we were trying to make a run at them, and it was a great way to finish up a career."

BSU finished the season with a record of 24-9, capping off one of the greatest seasons in school history. Unfortunately for the Broncos, it ended all too soon.

"They just shot the ball real well," Presnell said about George Washington. "They've got a great big post player who is hard to guard. She had 21 rebounds against us. She's just really, really big. We just really struggled, it was disappointing."

Finding a quarterback: part I

Coughlin moves from scout team to the middle of the Boise State quarterback search

BY JAKE GARCIN Sports Editor

The Boise State football team needs a quarterback. Freshman Michael Coughlin wants a shot at the job.

Coughlin may be fresh off the Bronco scout team, but the debate for who should be the next BSU signal caller can't take place without throwing Coughlin's name in the mix.

"The competition is going great," Coughlin said before the third day of spring workouts. "I'm confident I'm doing really well. It's a lot different than the fall. I'm getting a lot more reps. It's definitely different than the scout team."

Coughlin came to Boise from Mira Mesa High School in San Diego, Calif., last fall. Coughlin made an instantaneous splash on the blue turf as a red-shirt, scout team quarterback during the 2006 season.

Coughlin was named Offensive Scout Player of the Year for his impressive showings in practice all season long.

Michael Coughlin (above) is the youngest player competing to be the next Bronco QB.

Following the departure of quarterback senior Jared Zabransky, the Broncos are looking to select one of the four quarterbacks in the BSU program as a replacement.

Although Coughlin is the youngest of the four QB's, at this point in time he appears to have as good of a chance as any to be the next Bronco QB.

"I don't think the coaches have put much emphasis on who is No. 1, who is No. 2, right now," Coughlin said. "We're pretty much even."

Coughlin is competing for playing time with Sophomore Nick Lomax, Junior Bush Hamdan and Senior Taylor Tharp. Although Tharp has seen the most playtime over the past two years, none of the players has an overwhelming amount of real game experience.

The lack of playing time by all four players makes the QB race even closer this year.

All four players bring a different type of weapon to the position, which could put a quarterback with a new look in the BSU backfield in 2007.

"I think everyone has their own strengths," Coughlin said. "Everyone brings something different to the table. I think that my height helps. I feel that I have a strong arm and good decision making."

Coughlin doesn't exactly fit the QB mold BSU fans have grown accustomed to seeing.

The last few Bronco quarterbacks have been smaller, mobile players.

Both Zabransky and Ryan Dinwiddie were known for their strong arms, but also for their ability to be a threat on the ground. BSU listed Zabransky at 6'2", 203 pounds. Dinwiddie was even smaller at 6'0", 190 pounds. Coughlin stands a towering 6'5" and weighs in at 215 pounds.

Not to say Coughlin isn't athletic, but he certainly brings a more traditional pocket passing presence to the team.

In high school Coughlin was named Third-Team All-State by CalHiSports.com and was also named All-Eastern League-Offensive Player of the Year by Union-Tribune.

In his senior season he completed 119 of 195 passes for 25 touchdowns and just three interceptions. After a year in the background Coughlin is moving back into the spot light. According to Coughlin the newfound attention isn't going to affect him or any of the other three players in the QB race.

"On the field we're always competing in everything we do - every drill," Coughlin said. "Off the field we're hanging out, going to eat, talking and joking around. We're captured the best record in the league. Not bad for a team who's bench only goes three or four deep

Bringing it hard is a bit of an understatement for the hottest team in the league. During the team's last 12 games the Stampede average 106 points per game and shot better than 52 percent from the field.

"It's hard to lose when you're putting up those kind of numbers," Gates said. "We have a group of guys who come out and play for each other and that makes a difference."

During the month of March the Stampede won six consecutive games until it dropped back-to-back losses last week. One loss came to the Austin Toros and the other to the Anaheim Arsenal. Idaho got back on the winning track Saturday night cruising past Anaheim 118-99 in a game that showcased nine lead changes and seven ties. The Stampede dumped in 75 points in the final two quarters alone, leaning on sharp shooting and defensive pressure in the second half to break its lead wide open. Idaho shot nearly 60 percent from the field and forced 16 turnovers and lead by as many as 26 points. Luke Jackson led Idaho, scoring 29 points and dishing six assists. Ricky Sanchez went 6-of-9 from beyond the arc finishing with 26 points.

"We come out and we play hard every night," Ricky Sanchez said. "We have the best record in the league for a reason and we plan to keep it that way." Meanwhile, the team members have a lot of work ahead of them before they can rest on reputation alone. Idaho (28-13 overall) holds just a two-game lead over the Colorado 14ers (26-15 overall) in the Western Division.

"We've got to stay focused on playing solid defense and being unselfish," Gates said. "If we fail to do those things we've failed to reach our goals and we don't want that."

Remarkably, the Stampede are also chasing a piece of history. Idaho only needs to play .500 basketball over their last 12 games to capture a league record for wins in a regular season with 50 or fewer games scheduled. Thus far the Stampede are just 1-2 but are determined to improve. "We play to win and that's it,"

We've got to stay focused on playing solid defense and being unselfish. If we fail to do those things we've failed to reach our goals and we don't want that. "

> - Bryan Gates, Idaho Stampede head coach

Sanchez said. "We know we have a handful of guys who can carry us if we need it and that's why we can be so dangerous and win so many games." Although Idaho's bench doesn't go very deep the Stampede enjoy balance on the offensive side of the ball. On any given night anyone on Idaho's roster can take charge and lead the team in scoring.

"Offensive production is something we can get from anyone on this roster," Gates said. "When guvs like Ronnell [Taylor] or Randy [Livingston] get exhausted we have other guys who step in and fill the void.'

Guys like Lance Allred, who has scored a season high 30 points twice during the month of March, or Luke Jackson who dumped in a season high 29 points Saturday, all make a difference. The Stampede also recently acquired center Badou Gaye from the league's available player pool and waived guard Julius Hodge. Gaye played a breakout game Saturday night for Idaho scoring 16 points and grabbing nine rebounds.

"I'm really pleased Badou got such great minutes tonight and took advantage," Gates said. "We see him playing an important role on our team." Idaho also waived center Peter John Ramos late last month due to injury. Ramos was a regular starter for the Stampede for much of the early season.

"We feel like we've got the right guys in here to get this thing done," Gates said. "With so many changes all the time we try to make the best with what we have.'

The Stampede will hit the road March 24-30 with games in Albuquerque and Los Angeles, but return to Quest Arena April 1 for a match-up with Bakersfield.
