4-15-2019

Women Writers in The Atlantic Monthly: 1865-1900

Sydney Kuisti
Boise State University

Karah Frazier-Harrold
Boise State University
Women Writers in The Atlantic Monthly: 1865-1900
by Sydney Kuisti and Karah Frazier-Harrold

Harriet Beecher Stowe (1811-1896)

A founder of the magazine, Stowe was an advocate for women's and civil rights. Her novels, like Uncle Tom's Cabin and Pink and White Tyranny, exemplify her influence before and after the war. She founded the genre of domestic fiction and was an advocate for married women and their rights to their talents and money. Stowe was widely popular during her lifetime because she wrote about issues and complexities concerning equality.

"But as at the bottom of Pandora's box there was a grain of comfort, so there was in ours. Though we made nothing, and lost all we invested, our hands were all duly paid." -from "Our Florida Plantation" (May 1879 Issue)

Kate Chopin (1850-1904)

Publishers repeatedly turned away Chopin for her graphic and experimental writings involving the female sexuality. Chopin believed in encouraging the cultural discussion of sexuality, divorce, and maternity. Chopin also influenced her readers to question the concept of identity. This included not only exploring what it meant to be female, but also the meaning of regional and national identity.

"And again, she had liked him, and had even been rather flustered when he pressed her hands and kissed them, and kissed her lips and cheeks and eyes, when she accepted him" - from "Athenaise" (Aug. 1896 Issue)

Edith Wharton (1862-1937)

Established in 1857, The Atlantic Monthly was a literary magazine that used major writers to tackle modern and national issues. In a post-civil war period, these women were able to share their revolutionary and influential ideas through the reach of this famous American publisher.

"There, on the ruined rampart climbing high, We sat and dreamed among the browsing sheep." -from “Euryalus” (Dec. 1889 Issue)

Sarah Orne Jewett (1849-1909)

Originally, Jewett wrote moral stories for children inspired by her Christian faith spreading character and virtues to her young readers. In her later writing, Jewett embraced diversity of race and sexual orientation through her short literary works allowing her readers to empathize with minorities. Her publishings in the Atlantic Monthly inspired a new wave of women writers including Kate Chopin.

"Oh, my dear Martha! she cried, ‘won’t you kiss me good-night? Oh, Martha, have you remembered like this, all these long years!’" -from “Martha’s Lady” (Oct. 1897 Issue)

Works Consulted: