FOOTBALL

Playing against heavier and more experienced teams, the Boise Junior College football squad acknowledged an unsuccessful season.

It is the custom of sporting men never to make excuses for defeat. The men who represented B.J.C. on the gridiron for the 1937 season maintained that tradition.

Veteran material was at a premium when Coach Max Eiden issued the first call for practice last autumn. Four experienced backfield men: Gene Kipp, Don Stephens, Wayne Eagles, and Albert Aschenbrener, furnished the nucleus for the 1937 team. Coach Eiden selected the remainder of the squad from approximately thirty men, representing the best young manhood in the college, some of them wearing football gear for the first time.

Although rated the underdog in every contest, no opponent ever accused the Broncs of quitting when the game was going against them; rather, their fighting spirit won for them respect and admiration from spectator and foe alike. Aggressiveness and determination were a part of the Broncos. Never, even in the face of certain defeat, did they stop fighting.

Featured this year were two long trips, one to Grand Junction, Colorado, where the fighting Broncos were handed a heart-breaking defeat by Mesa Junior College, who won the game by six points. The second journey was made to Rexburg, where, on a slippery, rain-soaked field the Broncos held the Ricks' gridders to a 0-0 score.

The Columbian Club Hall was the scene of the annual football banquet and dance. Albert Aschenbrener was announced as honorary captain of the team this year. Betty Hearne was crowned football queen by Captain Aschenbrener at the intermission. A coronet of white gardenias represented her unflinching loyalty to the team.

B.J.C. may have a more successful season another year; but never will the gallantry displayed by the team of 1937 be surpassed.

BASKETBALL

With only three veteran players from last year's basketball squad to build a team around, Max Eiden started conditioning his men early in January. Returning players who had one season's college experience were Albert Aschenbrener, Burton Williams, and Cliff Anderson.

Boise Junior College did not compete with other schools this year, but was a member of the city basketball league. Games were played on the Y.M.C.A. floor and in Talbot gymnasium. From the large field of contesting teams in the league, B.J.C. finished in fifth place.

The team was handicapped seriously throughout the season, losing several of its first string players during the season: Cliff Anderson, who graduated at the mid-year; Ralph Bennett, who transferred to the College of Idaho; and Jack Rawls, who dropped out of school.

With new material, Coach Eiden formed a new team to finish the basketball season and to participate in the invitational state tournament.

INTRAMURAL BASKETBALL

Intramural basketball was started in December with six teams in the line-up: Ramblers, Terrible Swedes, Vandals, Huskies, Trojans, and the Golden Gophers. The Terrible Swedes were victorious.

The intramural basketball league serves two purposes: first, it provides play for those men who do not make the regular varsity team; second, it provides Coach Eiden with an opportunity to look over the prospects before the actual season starts.

YELL LEADERS

Whether the team is winning or losing, it is the duty of the yell leaders to maintain a spirit of cooperation between the spectators and the players on the field.

This year four enthusiastic students were chosen to fill the roles of yell leaders. They were: Hadley Olson, yell king; Dortha Power, Don Fox, Lorie Baxter.

The management of pep rallies and assemblies was placed entirely in their hands. Remember the parade and gigantic bonfire the night before the Homecoming game?

TENNIS

As soon as spring weather makes its appearance, the first thought is: "When will the courts be dry enough to play tennis?" This year a long rainy season somewhat delayed the beginning of practice.

As a means of competitive practice, and also as a means of determining the school's "champ" tennis player, a ladder tournament was run off. Over twenty-five men took part. As a result of this play-off, Elliot Olson showed his skill by capturing first place. Burton Williams placed second, Glenn Davis won third, and Bob Brown took fourth place. The school participated in two competitive matches with the College of Idaho early in May.

Elliot Olson acted as manager of the tennis squad, and he also had complete charge of the ladder tournament. All games took place at the Boise Public School Field courts.

As this book went to press, tentative plans had been made for a trip to south-eastern Idaho.

IN RECOGNITION

We, the students of Boise Junior College, present our esteem and appreciation to those self-sacrificing men and women whose dream was Boise Junior College.

The crystallization of that dream was not due to the casual whim of a bounteous genie . . . far from it . . . work and self-abnegation were the catalists which enabled these men and women to create this . . . our college.

The financial spectre which haunts almost all courageous enterprise was laid by a board of public-spirited persons who formed a non-profit corporation.

Sponsored in 1932-34 by the Episcopal church, the college's first president was the Right Reverend Middleton S. Barnwell, Bishop of Idaho. Since that time two other outstanding leaders in educational thought: Myron S. Clites in 1934-36, and Eugene B. Chaffee, present incumbent, have held the chief executive chair.

The members of the board of trustees constitute the administrative authority of our college. These men and women serve that B.J.C. may be a living institution . . . enabling the youth of Boise and southern Idaho to have access to higher education . . . instructed by men and women whose qualifications are unimpeachable, and whose quality of interest in youth, and enthusiasm for youth is unique in an educational world dedicated to youth's service.

Chairman of the board of trustees is O. O. Haga; vice chairman is Ben. W. Oppenheim; secretary-treasurer, Clyde F. Potter. Members of the board are: Bishop F. B. Bartlett, Mrs. Alfred Budge, Sr., J. J. Chapman, R. W. York, and Harry L. Yost.

Boise's younger business men, represented by the Boise Junior Chamber of Commerce, have always been loyal supporters of the college. It was through their vigorous, untiring effort that the Public School Field was lighted for night football. They, with other progressive, civic-minded groups, have sponsored dances and carnivals, turning over to the college all funds taken in excess of the actual cost of the affairs. This spring the Junior Chamber sponsored a subscription campaign; all proceeds going to the college as a non-profit corporation.

An adequate estimation of the magnanimity of Boise merchants in supporting this college is impossible. Willingness to serve is no meaningless virtue; rather, it is the base upon which all cooperative undertaking must rely if it would succeed. So Boise merchants . . . the firms whose advertisements help make this annual an actuality . . . have evidenced their genuine interest in young man and womanhood. Mercantile science is obviously founded upon good-will and quality of goods. So intrinsically bound are these facts that their separation is disastrous.

Boise Junior College students feel and appreciate the interest in them as individuals, and in their college as demonstrated by the business men of Boise.

Boise Junior College needs the help and understanding of the men and women of Boise. The men and women of Boise need Boise Junior College as an institution of higher learning for their sons and daughters.

The very genuine feeling of regret, as experienced by graduating men and women upon leaving this college is real indication of the nature of the associations developed by the individual between himself and his fellow students, and with members of the faculty with whom he has had contact. These young people are quite real in this feeling . . . they love the college which was made possible by you, Mr. and Mrs. Boise!

For assistance in the creation of the School Life theme for the 1938 Les Bois, we extend to Harold Hughes, whose versatile and accomplished penchant for line-drawing is extraordinary, our gratitude.

WOMEN'S SPORTS

With Lucille Nelson Robertson in charge, the Women's Athletic Association opened their annual program of activities with a new game, speedball. This sport is somewhat like football in that it is played by teams of eleven players each on a regulation football field and has definite positions for offense and defense.

The Associated Women elected Margie Smith assistant to the physical education instructor. In this capacity she directed skating, bicycling, and hiking parties.

Freshman women won the basketball tournament; sophomore women the volleyball. These are ideal games for inter-class competition, and the women students enjoyed them tremendously.

Badminton, a sport which requires skill and coordination rather than sheer strength, was managed by Lidia Uranga. More than twenty-five women turned out for the single elimination and consolation tournaments.

Rounding out the sports schedule were such individual sports as diving and swimming, tennis, horseback riding, and hiking. Points were awarded for these activities in order that the individual might earn her letter. Recording of points was the duty of Nina Seibel.

FOOTBALL HONORS

Every football season is culminated by the choosing of an honorary football captain and a football queen.

The football captain is, of course, a member of the football squad. His loyalty to the school and team is unquestionable; his value as a member of the team is worthy of keen recognition. He has won a place in the hearts of his fellow players. With such qualities, the honorary captain is an individual to be held in high esteem.

All men who turn out for football are entitled to one vote in the election of the captain. This year Albert Aschenbrener won the much-coveted title.

The football queen is elected by those same men of Boise Junior College who elect the football captain.

Every sophomore girl secretly dreams of being queen, and justly so, for the realization of such a dream will be a cherished memory. For her school spirit, personality, and scholarship, Betty Hearne was selected by the team to receive the crown.

The annual football dance is the occasion at which the captain's and queen's names are made public. With due ceremony Queen Betty was crowned with a halo of gardenias by Captain Aschenbrener.
